PREFACE TO THE FIFTH EDITION

THESE Outlines represent over fifty years' study and forty-three years' teaching of jurisprudence. The first edition (1903) was chiefly from the English analytical standpoint, and so on its systematic side from the standpoint of the Continental Pandectists. It contained little more than references to the English texts, but gave some translations from Continental jurists and philosophers. The second edition (1914), being meant for use by more mature students, included an Outline of a Course in Theory of Law and Legislation published in two parts in 1912 and 1913, and references to Roman law sources, to the text books of the modern Roman law, and to Continental historical and philosophical jurists. Also it contained a short bibliography. In the third edition (1920) the references to the literature of jurisprudence in all languages were greatly expanded and the bibliography was made to cover the materials for analytical and historical jurisprudence, and comparative law, as well as the writings on jurisprudence from all standpoints. The fourth edition (1928) was a thorough revision of the third.

In the present edition there has again been a thorough revision and the systematic part has been wholly rewritten and much amplified. It is neither easy nor profitable to draw a sharp line between analytical jurisprudence and comparative law. Hence the bibliography has been made somewhat full on the side of comparative law. As to what is more strictly within the scope of a science of law, the bibliography has been made as complete as possible.

Like the English books on jurisprudence, and the treatises of the civilians and commentators on the civil codes, the Outlines deal only with private law, excluding conflict of laws, public law, criminal law, and international law, except as they bear incidentally on general problems of the legal order, of the authoritative precepts and technique and ideals of private law, and of the judicial and administrative processes in relation thereto. Like the Continental introductions to the study of law and treatises on the science of law, the Outlines are not confined to one approach, but take up each subject and topic from the analytical, the historical, the philosophical, and the sociological standpoint. Also, while made to the exigencies of my course on jurisprudence and so presenting materials for developing my own views, the Outlines endeavor to present all other views by full references to the writings in which they are expounded.

What I have expected students to read as the minimum for serious study of the subject is put in large type. What is available as to details, and what may be looked into by the teacher or by the student pursuing some particular point, is printed in small type. The bibliography has been brought down as nearly to date as conditions since 1939 would permit.

As to the citation of articles in the periodicals, I can only say that all that I have read are included, but it is quite possible that something worth while has escaped here and there. Unhappily, some of the best things which have been written have been the hardest to find.

In preparation of this edition I had hoped to have the cooperation of Dr. Julius Stone, Professor in Auckland University College (University of New Zealand), who, as Instructor and afterward Assistant Professor, assisted me in teaching jurisprudence from 1932 to 1936. He went through the legal periodicals from 1928 to 1936 to find articles which deserved my notice, but was called to another position before we could begin work upon what I had planned as a joint production. I am therefore solely responsible.

Rev.* 1103, reprinted in his Law and the Social Order, 219; id Law and Scientific Method, in Law and the Social Order, 184; Thorne, Concerning the Scope of Jurisprudence, 35 American L. Rev. 546.

Uses of the term "jurisprudence."

Is there a "science of law"?

Rueff, From the Physical to the Social Sciences (transl. by Green).

The theory of "normative sciences."

Methods of legal science.

A developed system of law may be looked at from four points of view:

1. Analytical. — Examination of its structure, subject-matter, and precepts in order to reach by analysis the principles, theories, and conceptions which it logically presupposes, and to organize the authoritative materials of judicial and administrative determinations on this logical basis.

2. Historical. — Investigation of its historical origin and development, and of the origin and development of its institutions and doctrines, in order to discover its general principles, and to organize the authoritative materials on the basis of these historically developed principles.

3. Philosophical. — Study of the philosophical bases of its institutions and doctrines; an attempt to reach its fundamental principles through philosophy, and to understand and organize the ideal element in the authoritative materials.

4. Sociological. — Study of the system of law functionally as a part or phase of social control, and of its institutions and doctrines with respect to the social ends to be served.

Applied to the study of legal systems generally, these four methods are the methods of jurisprudence. The propriety of naming a comparative method as a method of jurisprudence may be doubted. The analytical, historical, and philosophical methods, as methods of jurisprudence, must be comparative.

II. HISTORY OF JURISPRUDENCE

(To the Nineteenth Century)

A. THE BEGINNINGS OF A SCIENCE OF LAW IN ANTIQUITY

1. Greek philosophical theories of justice and the social order.

Aristotle, Nicomachean Ethics, bk. v, bk. viii, 7, 2-4 (there is a convenient transl. by Browne in Bohn's Libraries); Aristotle, Politics, i, 1, 9, i, 13, iii, 1, iii, 4-5, iv, 12 (Jowett's transl. should be used); Plato, Republic, ii, 368, iii, 397-398 (Jowett's transl. should be used).

See Berolzheimer, The World's Legal Philosophies, 46-77; II Vinogradoff, Historical Jurisprudence, chaps. 2-3; Pound, Introduction to the Philosophy of Law, 15-26; McIlwain, The Growth of Political Thought in the West, chaps. I, II, III.

2. The secularization of social control (in Roman law 304-253 B.C.) — lawyers and law teachers.

Girard, Manuel élémentaire du droit romain (8 ed.) 47-51; Jolowicz, Historical Introduction to Roman Law, 86-91.

3. The beginnings of legal analysis — the "taking of differences" and framing of maxims.

III Jhering, Geist des römischen Rechts, §§ 49-50; Jörs, Römische Rechtswissenschaft zur Zeit der Republik. Compare The Hedaya (Hamilton's transl.) bk. 16, chap. 1 (Grady's ed. 244); Picot's Case, Y.B. Mich. 33 Edw. I (Horwood cd.) 22-23; The Executor's Case, id. 63; Note, Keilway, 41; Note, 2 Dyer, 111b in margin; 2 Dyer, 143b (pl. 57).

See also Pound, The Maxims of Equity, 34 Harv. L. Rev. 809; id. On Certain Maxims of Equity, Cambridge Legal Essays, 259-277.

4. Greek philosophy and Roman law — the beginnings of a general science of law.

Dareste, La science du droit en Grèce, 1-18, 29-34; Cicero, De oratore, i, 41, § 189.

(a) The Ius Gentium — rules universally applicable among civilized men, and hence applicable to foreigners. "A combination of comparative jurisprudence and rational speculation."

Buckland, Text Book of Roman Law (2 ed.) 52-55; Bruns-Lenel, Geschichte und Quellen des römischen Rechts, § 19 (in I Holtzendorff, Enzyklopädie der Rechtswissenschaft, 7 ed.); Cicero, De officiis, iii, 17, 69; id. Oratoriae partitiones, 37, 130; Gaius, i, 1; Inst. i, 2, pr. and §§ 1-2; Dig. i, 1, 1-6, 9.

See I Voigt, Das Ius naturale, aequum et bonum, und Ius Gentium der Römer, §§ 13-15, 42, 43, 79-88, 103; I Karlowa, Römische Rechtsgeschichte, §§ 59-60; I Kühlenbeck, Entwicklungsgeschichte des römischen Rechts, 205-235.

(b) The Ius Naturale — a speculative body of principles, serving as the basis of lawmaking, juristic doctrine, and criticism, of potential applicability to all men, in all ages, among all peoples, derived from reason and worked out philosophically.

Cicero, De officiis, iii, 5, 23; id. De republica, iii, 23, 33 (transl. by Sabine and Smith as Cicero on the Commonwealth); id. Tusculan Disputations, i, 13, 30; Inst. i, 2, pr. and §§ 1-2; Dig. i, 1, 1-6, 9.

See Burle, Essai historique sur le développement de la notion de droit naturel dans l'antiquité grecque; Bryce, Studies in History and Jurisprudence, essay 11; Maine, Ancient Law, chaps. 3-4 and Sir Frederick Pollock's notes E and F; Pollock, Essays in the Law, 31-79; Ritchie, Natural Rights, chap. 2; Salmond, The Law of Nature, 11 L. Q. Rev. 122; I Carlyle, History of Medieval Political Theory, chaps. 3-7; I Voigt, Das Ius naturale, aequum et bonum, und Ius Gentium der Römer, §§ 15-41, 52-64, 98.

See also Sabine and Smith, Cicero on the Commonwealth, chaps. II, III; McIlwaine, The Growth of Political Thought in the West, chap. IV.

5. Roman jurists and law teachers.

(a) The schools of lawyers: teachers and writers.

Dig. i, 2, 2, §§ 47-53 (Monro's transl. may be used); Roby, Introduction to the Study of Justinian's Digest, chap. 9; Jolowicz, Historical Introduction to the Study of Roman Law, 384-387; Krüger, Geschichte der Quellen und Literatur des römischen Rechts (2 ed.) § 20; Kipp, Geschichte der Quellen des römischen Rechts, § 18; Baviera, Le due scuole dei giureconsulti romani.

(b) The classical jurists.

Jolowicz, Historical Introduction to the Study of Roman Law, 387-399; Roby, Introduction to the Study of Justinian's Digest, chaps. 10-15; Girard, Manuel élémentaire du droit romain (8 ed.) 68-77.

(c) The fifth-century teachers.

Collinet, Histoire de l'école de droit de Beyrouth; id. The General Problems Raised by the Codification of Justinian, IV Revue d'histoire du droit, 1, 16-27; Jolowicz, Historical Introduction to the Study of Roman Law, 469-471.

B. THE BEGINNINGS OF A SCIENCE OF LAW IN THE MODERN WORLD ROMAN LAW AND SCHOLASTIC THEOLOGY

The history of modern legal science begins with the revival of the study of Roman law in the twelfth century.

See I Continental Legal History Series, General Survey, 128 (§ 38)-175, 178 (§ 77)-199; 2 Holdsworth, History of English Law, 124-142; Sohm, Institutes of Roman Law (transl. by Ledlie) Grueber's Introduction (in first ed. only) i-xxxvi; Sohm, Institutes of Roman Law (transl. by Ledlie, 3 ed.) §§ 24-28; Westlake, Chapters on the Principles of International Law, 17-51; Hastie, Outlines of Jurisprudence, 237-253, 260-271.

There are two parallel lines of juristic development from the twelfth century to the seventeenth, one legal, the other philosophical.

(a) The lawyers.

(1) The glossators.

I Continental Legal History Series, General Survey, 124-142 (transl. from Calisse, Storia del diritto italiano); Vinogradoff, Roman Law in the Middle Ages, 44-58; Kantorowicz, Studies in the Glossators of the Roman Law (1938); V Savigny, Geschichte des römischen Rechts im Mittelalter, 222-240; I Stintzing, Geschichte der deutschen Rechtswissenschaft, 102 ff.; Salvioli, Storia del diritto italiano (8 ed.) §§ 105-112, with full bibliography. See also II Pertile, Storia del diritto italiano (2 ed.) § 61; Del Vecchio, Di Irnerio e la sua scuola (1869); Besta L'opera di Irnerio (2 vols. 1896); Landsberg, Die Glosse des Accursius (1883); Pescatore, Die Glossen des Accursius (1888); Kantorowicz, Accursio e la sua biblioteca, 2 Rivista di storia del diritto italiano, 35.

(2) The commentators.

I Continental Legal History Series, General Survey, 356-378 (transl. from Calisse, Storia del diritto italiano); V Savigny, Geschichte des römischen Rechts im Mittelalter, 225-228, 353-356; VI ibid. 1-25; I Stintzing, Geschichte der deutschen Rechtswissenschaft, 106-133; Salvioli, Storia del diritto italiano (8 ed.) §§ 113-115, with full bibliography.

As to Bartolus, see II Continental Legal History Series, Great Jurists of the World, 58-108; Woolf, Bartolus of Sassoferrato; Van de Kamp, Bartolo da

Sassoferrato; Beale, Bartolus on the Conflict of Laws, contains a translation of the Commentary of Bartolus on Code, i, 4 — a good example of his method.

(3) The humanists.

The forerunner is Alciatus. See Viard, André Alciat, 1492-1550.

The French school — Jacobus Cujacius (Jacques Cujas, 1522-1590); Hugo Donellus (Doneau, 1527-1591).

I Continental Legal History Series, General Survey, 147-154 (transl. from Calisse, Storia del diritto italiano); ibid. 252-259 (transl. from Brissaud, Manuel d'histoire du droit français); II Continental Legal History Series, Great Jurists of the World, 58-108; I Stintzing, Geschichte der deutschen Rechtswissenschaft, 133-154; Salvioli, Storia del diritto italiano (8 ed.) §§ 124-131, with full bibliography; Gentili, De Iuris Interpretibus (ed. by Astuti); Astuti, Mos Italicus e Mos Gallicus.

(b) The philosophical jurist-theologians.

McIlwain, The Growth of Political Thought in the West, chap. VII.

(1) The schoolmen.

Thomas Aquinas (1225 [or 1227]-1274).

II DeWulf, History of Medieval Philosophy, §§ 269-289; Lachance, Le concept de droit selon Aristote et S. Thomas; Lottin, Le droit naturel chez S. Thomas et ses prédecesseurs.

(2) The Protestant jurist-theologians.

The emancipation of jurisprudence from theology.

Hemmingsen (Hemmingius) De lege naturae apodictica methodus (1562) Q. 9. This passage may be found also in II Kaltenborn, Die Vorläufer des Hugo Grotius, 31. Compare Grotius, De iure belli ac pacis, prolegomena (1625) § 11.

See I Hinrichs, Geschichte der Rechts und Staatsprinzipien seit der Reformation, 28-37; I Höffding, History of Modern Philosophy (transl. by Meyer) 42 ff.

There were sixteenth-century attempts to free international law from theology: Belli, De re militari et bello tractatus (1563) — see introduction to Nutting's transl. (Classics of International Law Series) 25a-26a; Gentile, De iure belli (1598) bk. I, cap. 1 (transl. in Classics of International Law Series).

(3) The Spanish jurist-theologians.

Universal as against nationalist theories.

Figgis, Studies of Political Thought from Gerson to Grotius, lect. 6; Scott, Francisco Suarez, His Philosophy of Law and of Sanctions, 22 Georgetown L. J. 405.

Sources: Soto, De iustitia et iure (1589); Suarez, De legibus ac deo legislatore (1619).

C. THE MODERN SCIENCE OF LAW

(From the Seventeenth to the Nineteenth Century)

1. Emancipation of law from the text of the Corpus Iuris.

François Hotman (Hotomannus, 1524-1590); Hermann Conring (1606-1681). Hotman, Anti-Tribonianus (1567) chaps. 1-2, 7-9, 12-13; Conring, De origine iuris germanici (1643) chaps. 21-27, 32-34.

See I Brissaud, Cours d'histoire générale du droit français, 353; Dareste, Étude sur François Hotman, II Revue de législation et de jurisprudence (1850) 257; II Stintzing, Geschichte der deutschen Rechtswissenschaft, 1-31, 165-188; I Continental Legal History Series, General Survey, 428-429 (transl. from II Stobbe, Geschichte der deutschen Rechtsquellen, 418-420); Brunner, Grundzüge der deutschen Rechtsgeschichte (8 ed.) § 64; Stobbe, Hermann Conring, der Begründer der deutschen Rechtsgeschichte (1870).

2. The law-of-nature school.

(a) The seventeenth century.

Hugo Grotius (De Groot) 1583-1645.

II Continental Legal History Series, Great Jurists of the World, 169-184, 305-344; Lysen, Hugo Grotius (1925); Vreeland, Hugo Grotius (1917); Knight, Life and Works of Hugo Grotius (1925); Pound, Grotius in the Science of Law (1925) 19 Am. Journ. of International Law, 685.

Sources: Grotius, De iure belli ac pacis (1625) — Whewell's transl. (1853) is convenient, there is also an abridged transl. by Campbell (1901), and a transl. in the Classics of International Law Series; Pufendorf, De iure naturae et gentium (1672) — Kennet's transl. (1703) may be found in several editions, and there is an abridged transl. by Spavan (1716).

Grotius, De iure belli ac pacis, prolegomena, 30, 40, bk. I, chap. I, 9-12; Pufendorf, De iure naturae et gentium, bk. II, chap. III, § XIII.

Gierke, Natural Law and the Theory of Society (transl. by Barker) introduction, § 3.

(b) The eighteenth century.

II Continental Legal History Series, Great Jurists of the World, 447-476.

Sources: Burlamaqui, Principes du droit naturel (1747) — Nugent's transl. in several editions is useful; Wolff, Institutiones iuris naturae et gentium (1750); Rutherford, Institutes of Natural Law (1754-1756); Vattel, Le droit des gens, préliminaires (1758). There are many translations of Vattel.

Wolff, Institutiones iuris naturae et gentium, chap. II, §§ 38, 41; Vattel, Le droit des gens, preface (1802 ed.) iii-iv (Chitty's transl. 5 Am. ed.) v ff.; Burlamaqui, Principes du droit naturel, pt. I, chap. I, 3-12, chap. II, chap. V, chap. VIII, 1-2; Rutherford, Institutes of Natural Law, bk. I, chap. I, chap. VII; I Blackstone, Commentaries, 38-43.

(c) The law-of-nature school in the nineteenth century.

(1) The classical French public law.

(b) Doctrines and methods.

The nineteenth-century schools represent different phases of a reaction from the philosophical method of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

I Austin, Lectures on Jurisprudence (5 ed.) 215-218; I Bentham, Traité de législation, chap. 13, § 10 (1802 ed. I, 133).

Bluntschli, Die neueren Rechtsschulen der deutschen Juristen (1862); Bekker, Ueber den Streit der historischen und der filosofischen Rechtsschule (1886); Pound, Interpretations of Legal History, lect. I.

(1) The historical school.

Forerunners: Jacques Cujas (1522-1590).

Gustav Hugo (1764-1844).

Edmund Burke (1729-1797).

Vicenzo Cuoco (1770-1823).

Founder: Friedrich Carl von Savigny (1779-1861).

At the end of the nineteenth century a revolt from the historical school, which had all but supplanted philosophical jurisprudence, and a new development of the philosophical school, resulted in three well-marked types of social philosophical jurisprudence.

(a) The social utilitarians.

Rudolf von Jhering (1818-1892).

II Continental Legal History Series, Great Jurists of the World, 590-599; Munroe Smith, Four German Jurists, 10 Political Science Q. 664, 11 id. 278, 12 id. 21; Rudolf von Jhering in Briefen an seine Freunde (1913).

Jhering, Law as a Means to an End (transl. by Husik) preface, lviii-lix, chap. 1, § 1 (pp. 1-3), chap. 3, § 5 (pp. 32-35), chap. 7 (pp. 71-74); id. Scherz und Ernst in der Jurisprudenz, pt. 3 (Im juristisches Begriffshimmel); I id. Geist des römischen Rechts, Einleitung; III id. 1, § 60; Jhering, Law as a Means to an End, chap. 5, § 4 (pp. 49-51), chap. 8, § 10 (pp. 239-246), chap. 8, § 12 (pp. 325-423).

(f) In France the same movement took the form of a revival of natural law.

Pound, Fifty Years of Jurisprudence, 51 Harv. L. Rev. 444, 463-472.

Charmont, La renaissance du droit naturel (1910) — see Modern French Legal Philosophy, §§ 43-103, for translation of part of this book — §§ 78-103 are important in the present connection; Haines, The Revival of Natural Law Concepts, chap. 10.

See Jung, Das Problem des natürlichen Rechts (1912).

There are two outstanding types: (1) neo-scholastic, (2) positivist-sociological.

(1) Neo-scholastic.

François Génry (1861-). See bibliography, post, 203.

Wortley, François Génry, in Modern Theories of Law, 139-159; Saleilles, Preface to Génry, Méthode d'interprétation (1 ed.) i-xiii; Génry, Méthode d'interprétation (1 ed.) 1-44, 174-175, 178-205, 456-473; id. Science et technique en droit privé positif, I, 11-21, II, 1-20, III, 1-31, IV, 142-157.

(g) In different forms, the revived natural law has recently become strong on the Continent generally.

(1) In Germany since 1920.

i. In public law.

Mattern, The Constitutional Jurisprudence of the German Republic, 614-635; Anschütz und Thoma, II Handbuch des deutschen Staatsrechts (1932) 137-159;

THE PHILOSOPHICAL SCHOOLS COMPARED

Law-of-Nature	Metaphysical	Social-Philosophical
Sought to deduce a complete system of principles, of universal validity, from the nature of man in the abstract, and to develop these principles into an all-sufficient code of legal rules.	Sought to deduce from some single fundamental idea a complete system of principles of universal validity to which jurists should endeavor to make the actual law conform.	Studies the ideal element of the actual law and seeks materials for criticism, for constructive law-making, and for guidance of judicial and administrative determinations, on the basis of some form of social philosophy.

THE TYPES OF THE SOCIAL-PHILOSOPHICAL SCHOOL

	Social-Utilitarians	Neo-Kantians	Neo-Hegelians
Tendency	Analytical and social-philosophical	Critical-logical and sociological	Historical and sociological
Leading Representative	Rudolf von Jhering (1818-1892)	Rudolf Stammler (1856-1938)	Josef Kohler (1849-1919)
Achievements	(1) Overthrow of the "jurisprudence of conceptions." (2) Insistence upon the interests which the legal system secures rather than upon the rights by which it secures them. (3) The theory of punishment as something to be adjusted to the criminal rather than to the nature of the crime. (4) Recognition in recent Continental thought of the imperative idea of law. (5) Giving us a theory of the administrative element in the legal order.	(1) Turning attention from the relation of morals and ethics to abstract rules and directing it to the relation of these matters to the administration of justice through rules. (2) The theory of the social ideal as the criterion of justice through rules. (3) Adding a theory of the just decision of causes to the theory of making just rules. (4) Giving us a theory of the application of legal precepts.	(1) The theory of law as the product of the civilization of a people. (2) The theory of the relation of comparative legal history and the philosophy of law. (3) Theory of the sociological interpretation and application of legal rules. (4) The method of formulating the jural postulates of the civilization of the time and place.

V. REALIST SCHOOLS

1. Introductory excursus — Interpretations of Legal History.

Pound, Interpretations of Legal History, lects. 2–5; Simkhovitch, Approaches to History, 44 Political Science Q. 481, 45 id. 481, 47 id. 410, 48 id. 23.

(a) Interpretations of history.

See Seligman, The Economic Interpretation of History (2 ed.); Small, General Sociology, 44–62; Shotwell, History of History, chap. 27; Barth, Die Philosophie der Geschichte als Soziologie, 200–346 (2 ed. 483–809, 3 and 4 ed. 511–856). For the religious interpretation see Belloc, History of England. For the geographical interpretation see Semple, Influences of Geographic Environment (1911); Febure, A Geographical Introduction to History (transl. by Mountford and Paxton 1925) with full bibliography. For the ethnological interpretation see Pittard, Race and History (transl. by Collum 1926) with full bibliography; Gumpłowicz, Der Rassenkampf (1883). For the economic interpretation see Patten, The Development of English Thought, a Study in the Economic Interpretation of History (1899); Croce, Historical Materialism and the Economics of Karl Marx, chap. 2; Levi, Un' interpretazione del materialismo storico, 22 Rivista di filosofia, 185.

(b) Interpretations of jurisprudence and legal history.

(1) Idealistic interpretations.

II Vinogradoff, Collected Papers, 320–325.

i. Ethical.

Hastie, Outlines of Jurisprudence, 152–153 (transl. of Friedländer, Juristische Enzyklopädie, 65).

ii. Religious.

II Stahl, Philosophie des Rechts (5 ed.) § 5, p. 4; Felix, Der Einfluss der Religion auf die Entwicklung des Eigenthums (1889) — chap. I is translated in Kocourek and Wigmore, Formative Influences in Legal Evolution; De Zulueta, The Girard Testimonial Essays, 30 L. Q. Rev. 214, 216–217; Pound, The Spirit of the Common Law, lect. 2. See also Albertsworth, Current Religious Thought and Modern Juristic Movements, 34 Internat. Journ. of Ethics, 364; Draghiescu, Droit, morale, et religion (1933) Archives de philosophie du droit et de sociologie juridique, 229–245; Weber, Die protestantische Ethik und der Geist der Kapitalismus, 20 Archiv für Sozialwissenschaft und Sozialpolitik, 1–54, 21 id. 1–110; Roberti (and others) Christianesimo e diritto romano; Pound, The Church in Legal History (1939) in Jubilee Law Lectures of Catholic University of America, 3–97; id. Law and Religion (1940) 27 The Rice Institute Pamphlet, 109–172.

iii. Political.

Lorimer, Institutes of Law (2 ed.) 353–356; Hastie, Outlines of Jurisprudence, 5, 7, 24–28 (Puchta, Cursus der Institutionen, §§ 2, 3, 9); Maine, Ancient Law, last two paragraphs of chap. 5.

(2) Geographical interpretations.

Randall, Law and Geography, III Evolution of Law Series, Formative Influences of Legal Development, 198-214; Semple, The Influences of Geographic Environment on Law, State, and Society, id. 215-233 (extracts from Influences of Geographic Environment); Declareuil, Histoire du droit français (1895) chap. 1; Langhans-Ratzburg, Begriff und Aufgaben der geographischen Rechtswissenschaft, beiheft to Zeitschrift für Geopolitik (1928).

(3) Ethnological interpretations.

i. Idealistic.

I Jhering, Geist des römischen Rechts, § 19; Muirhead, Historical Introduction to the Private Law of Rome, § 1. But see I Voigt, Römische Rechtsgeschichte, § 2; I Cuq, Institutions juridiques des Romains, 29-30; I Kühlenbeck, Entwicklungsgeschichte des römischen Rechts, 31-40. Compare Hegel, Grundlinien der Philosophie des Rechts, §§ 346-347 (Dyde's transl. 343-344).

ii. Psychological.

Carle, La vita del diritto (2 ed.) bk. V; Fouillée, L'idée moderne du droit (6 ed.) bk. I, introduction and chap. 5 (Modern French Legal Philosophy, §§ 1-45); Duquesne, Sur l'esprit du peuple allemand comme source d'origine du droit allemand in Introduction à l'étude du droit comparé (Recueil d'études en honneur d'Edouard Lambert) pt. V, § 150, pp. 225-239.

iii. Positivist.

Post, Die Grundlagen des Rechts, 8-9.

For critique, see Tourtoulon, Principes philosophiques de l'histoire du droit, 89-131 (Philosophy in the Development of Law, 84-95). See also Lowie, Anthropology and Law, in Ogburn and Goldenweiser, The Social Sciences, 50-57; Mazzarella, La concezione etnologica della legislazione, 6 Rivista internazionale di filosofia del diritto, 520-634; Riemann, Rasse und Recht, 35 Zeitschrift für Geschichtliche Staatswissenschaft, 273; Trimbom, Die Methode der ethnologischen Rechtsforschung, 43 Zeitschrift für vergleichende Rechtswissenschaft, 416.

(4) The economic interpretation.

On another side the same movement that led to the social-philosophical schools led to the economic interpretation—a method which had for a time much vogue, without at first giving us any general treatises on jurisprudence or a general school of jurists.

Loria, Economic Foundations of Law, III Evolution of Law Series, Formative Influences of Legal Development, 234-266 (Keasbey's transl. Economic Foundations of Society, 73-114); Pound, The Economic Interpretation and the Law of Torts, 53 Harv. L. Rev. 365.

Follett, Creative Experience, 257-258; Hocking, Man and the State, 280-299; Hale, Economics and Law, in Ogburn and Goldenweiser, The Social Sciences, 131-142; Cairns, Law and the Social Sciences, chap. 3, especially pp. 121-122; Commons, Value in Law and Economics, in II Law: A Century of Progress (N. Y. Univ. publication) 232.

i. Idealistic — the realization of an economic idea.

Croce, The Philosophy of Hegel, 201-202; Capograssi, Le glosse di Marx a Hegel, I Studi Filosofico-Giuridici Dedicati a Giorgio Del Vecchio, 54; Rappaport, Die Marxistische Rechtsauffassung; Kelsen, Allgemeine Rechtslehre im Lichte materialistischer Geschichtsauffassung, 66 Archiv für Sozialwissenschaft und Sozialpolitik, 449.

ii. Mechanical-positivist.

Centralization and the Law, 23, 31-35, 63-64, 132-133; Adams, The Modern Conception of Animus, 19 Green Bag, 12, 17, 32-33. See Bohlen, Studies in the Law of Torts, 344, 368-377, reprinted from 59 U. Pa. L. Rev. 298, 318-325. For critiques see Stammeler, Sozialismus und Christentum (1920) 58-69; Croce, Riduzione della filosofia del diritto alla filosofia dell' economia (1907); Burdick, Is Law the Expression of Class Selfishness? 25 Harv. L. Rev. 349; Laski, Studies in Law and Politics, 276 ff.; id. Review of Coker, Recent Political Thought, 43 Yale L. J. 1200, 1201-1202; Albertsworth, Cases on Industrial Law, 1-5.

As to "class struggle" see Sulzbach, Class and Class Struggle (1940) 6 Journ. of Social Philosophy, 22.

iii. Realist.

See II Berozheim, System der Rechts- und Wirtschaftsphilosophie, § 40 (The World's Legal Philosophies, 298-307); Bohlen, Old Phrases and New Facts, 83 U. Pa. L. Rev. 305, 306-307.

In connection with extreme economic interpretations reference may be made to: Machen, Do the Incorporation Laws Allow Sufficient Freedom to Commercial Enterprise? (1909) 14 Rep. Maryland Bar Assn. 78, 81-84, 85, 87-89; People v. Shedd, 241 Ill. 155, 161-162, 163, 165-167 (1909); Chorley, The Conflict of Law and Commerce, 48 L. Q. Rev. 51; W. N. Hillas & Co. Ltd. v. Arcos Ltd., 36 Commercial Cases, 353; May & Butcher v. The King, unreported, discussed in W. N. Hillas & Co. Ltd. v. Arcos Ltd., supra, at pp. 366-368; Fanton v. Denville [1932] 2 K. B. 309.

(5) Conceivably, a great-lawyer interpretation.

Pound, Interpretations of Legal History, 124-140; Frankfurter, Mr. Justice Brandeis, 49-50.

2. Economic determinism.

On determinism in jurisprudence generally see Tourtoulon, Principes philosophiques de l'histoire du droit, 658-680 (English transl. as Philosophy in the Development of Law, 567-586).

The sociological school arose, under the influence of the positivist philosophy, as another phase of the movement considered under III and IV, supra.

The forerunner is Montesquieu (1689-1755).

A logical-psychological intuitionist form of this psychological sociology of law is to be seen in the work of Leo Petrazycki (1864-1931). For the most part his writings are accessible only in Russian or Polish.

THE PRINCIPAL SCHOOLS OF JURISTS COMPARED

Analytical	Historical	Philosophical	Sociological
I. What element in the complex we call law and what kind of system of social control do they regard?	Consider all social control; consider the past rather than the present of law; or the present through the past only.	Seek to understand, organize, and criticize the ideal element in law; seek ideal standards by which to criticize law and direct lawmaking.	Consider the working of law more than its abstract content.
II. How do they answer the question as to the nature of law? How do they answer the question how law comes into existence?	Regard law as something made consciously by lawgivers, legislative or judicial; postulate bodies of law, such as Justinian's codification or the Code Napoléon.	Agree with the historical jurist that law is not made, but is found. Find the binding force of a legal precept in its expression of a principle of right and justice.	Regard law as a social institution which may be improved by intelligent human effort, and hold it their duty to discover the best means of furthering and directing such effort.
III. How do they answer the question what makes law obligatory? What do they take to be the source of the authority of law? What do they hold gives efficacy to the legal order?	See chiefly the force and constraint behind legal rules; conceive that the sanction of law is enforcement by the judicial organs of the state, and that nothing which lacks an enforcing agency is law.	Look at the ethical bases of rules rather than at their sanction.	Lay stress upon the social purposes which law subserves rather than upon sanction; regard means of making legal precepts effective in action as one of the problems of legal science.
IV. What form of legal precept do they take as the type?	Take custom or those customary modes of decision that make up a body of juristic tradition or of case law as the type of law.	Have no necessary preference for any form of law.	Look upon legal institutions, precepts, and doctrines functionally and regard the form as a matter of means only.
V. What are their philosophical views?	Their philosophical views are utilitarian or teleological.	Hold very diverse philosophical views. In the XIX century Hegelians or Krauseans. Today some form of the Social-Philosophical School.	Their philosophical views are very diverse. Chiefly they are (a) Social-Philosophical of one type or another, (b) Positivists, (c) Pragmatists.

THE PROGRAMME OF THE SOCIOLOGICAL SCHOOL

Sociological jurists insist upon eight points:

(a) Study of the actual social effects of legal institutions, legal precepts, and legal doctrines.

Ehrlich, Grundlegung der Soziologie des Rechts, chap. 21 (transl. by Moll as Fundamental Principles of the Sociology of Law, 486-506); id. Die Erforschung des lebenden Rechts, 35 Schmoller's Jahrbuch für Gesetzgebung, 190; id. Das lebende Recht der Völker von Bukowina (1913); Page, Professor Ehrlich's Czernowitz Seminar of Living Law, Proceedings of Fourteenth Annual Meeting of the Association of American Law Schools, 46; Kantorowicz, Rechtswissenschaft und Soziologie, 7-8; Van der Eycken, Méthode positive de l'interprétation (1907) 109; Moore and Sussman, Legal and Institutional Methods Applied to the Debiting of Direct Discounts, 40 Yale L. J. 380, 555, 752, 928, 1054; Douglas, Vicarious Liability and Administration of Risk, 38 Yale L. J. 584, 720; Schoene and Watson, Workmen's Compensation on Interstate Railways (1934) 47 Harv. L. Rev. 389; Fortas, Wage Assignments in Chicago (1933) 42

I, Maryland, vol. II, Ohio.

(b) Sociological study in preparation for lawmaking.

Kantorowicz, Rechtswissenschaft und Soziologie, 9; Tanon, L'évolution du droit et la conscience sociale (3 ed.) 196-198; Willcox, The Need of Social Statistics as an Aid to the Courts (1913); Oliphant, The Relation of Current Economic and Social Problems to the Restatement of the Law (reprint from Acad. Pol. Sci. N. Y. 1923); Douglas, Wage Earner Bankruptcies: State v. Federal Control, 42 Yale L. J. 591; Williston, Some Modern Tendencies in the Law (1929) 141-158.

(c) Study of the means of making legal precepts effective in action.

Pound, The Need of a Sociological Jurisprudence, 19 Green Bag, 607; id. Law in Books and Law in Action, 44 Am. L. Rev. 12; id. The Limits of Effective Legal Action, 27 Internat. Journ. of Ethics, 150; id. The Administration of Justice in the Modern City, 26 Harv. L. See, post, XX, 3; XX, 6.

(d) Study of juridical method: psychological study of the judicial, legislative, and juristic processes as well as philosophical study of the ideals.

Cardozo, The Nature of the Judicial Process (1921); id. The Growth of the Law, lect. 3; Pound, The Theory of Judicial Decision, 36 Harv. L. Rev. 641, 802, 940; Wigmore, Problems of Law, 65-101; Science of Legal Method, 9 Modern Legal Philosophy Series, especially Wurzel, Juridical Thinking, § 30, pp. 422-428; Morris, How Lawyers Think (1937); Isaacs, How Lawyers Think, 23 Columbia L. DEFINITIONS OF JURISPRUDENCE FOR DISCUSSION IN CONNECTION WITH THE FOREGOING

The formal science of positive law. — Holland, Elements of Jurisprudence (13 ed.) 13.

Scientific knowledge of the history and system of right (law). — I Puchta, Cursus der Institutionen, § 33.

The ultimate object of jurisprudence is the realization of the idea in the ideal of humanity, the attainment of human perfection, and this object is identical with the object of ethics. . . .

The proximate object of jurisprudence, the object which it seeks as a separate science (i.e. from ethics) is liberty. But liberty, being the perfect relation between human beings, becomes a means towards the realization of their perfection as human beings. Hence jurisprudence, in realizing its special or proximate object, becomes a means towards the realization of the ultimate object which it has in common with ethics. The relation in which jurisprudence stands to ethics is thus a subordinate one, the relation of species to genus. — Lorimer, Institutes of Law (2 ed.) 353, 355.

The science of the human will, in the distinction of the particular from the universal, and in the relation of the particular to the universal. — Herkless, Jurisprudence, 1.

Jurisprudence has for its subject law, that is, an aggregate of norms which determine the mutual relations of men living in a community. — Arndts, Juristische Encyklopädie, § 1.

Juristic encyclopedia, accordingly, is a systematic, unified survey of the means of peaceable adjustment of the external relations of mankind and social communities. — Gareis, Science of Law (transl. by Kocourek) 26.

It is at once a philosophy, a science, and an art. As a philosophy, its desire is to understand justice; as a science, its purpose is to explain the evolution of justice; as an art, its aim is to formulate those rules of conduct essential to the realization of justice. Conceived in this manner, jurisprudence forms the background of all associated activity; it provides the framework that limits and controls the exercise of liberty; it reflects the color and resounds the tone of those unconscious premises of action which give character to a civilization. The law is neither a schoolmaster for instruction nor a guardian for command; it is rather the expression of the ethical sense of a community crystallized about the problem of common living. — Adams, Economics and Jurisprudence, 8.

The science of law in the wider sense is our whole knowledge of law. But this knowledge is on the one hand practical, on the other hand philosophical. Accordingly it may be divided into the science of law in its narrower and more proper sense, called jurisprudence, and the philosophy of law. — I Sternberg, Allgemeine Rechtslehre, § 12.

General theory of law investigates the formal (constructive) side of fundamental juristic conceptions and legal institutions; the philosophy of law investigates their material kernel and basis. — II Berolzheimer, System der Rechts- und Wirthschaftsphilosophie, 20.

The Science of Justice as practiced in civilized nations. — Beale, The Development of Jurisprudence during the Nineteenth Century, I Select Essays in Anglo-American Legal History, 558.

The theory of law may set itself narrower or wider limits for its task. Accordingly it is either jurisprudence in the narrower sense, or philosophy of law.

In its narrower limitation, jurisprudence has to do primarily with the immediate application of law, the carrying out of the existing law, juristic technique. . . . It inquires only with respect to the law as to which we can say that it obtains, that it is in force, that is, that it is generally recognized as furnishing a measure for the events of life, for legal transactions, for wrongs, for tax administration, for acts of police, for affairs of international intercourse and the like. In the modern state this is chiefly the written law. — Schmidt, Einführung in das Recht (2 ed.) § 4.

The field of the science of law is not nature, but civilization. The fundamental conception with which the jurist must work is not causality, what must be, but freedom, what ought to be. The rules with which the science of law has to do are not theoretical but practical, and the world which comes under its investigation is that of ideas. — Binder, Philosophie des Rechts, 852.

Rule, idea, and life — jurisprudence has a share in all three of these. It has for its subject-matter the imperative of the lawgiver, a will, and so it is equally near to and far from the world of what ought to be and of values and the world of what is practicable and of what is. — Radbruch, Grundzüge der Rechtsphilosophie, 211.

Law is a social phenomenon, like religious, moral, political and economic phenomena. . . .

It is evident that there can be no question here of a science in the sense of the natural sciences. They have for their object the study of material things, and the phenomena of material things are their theatre. These things are animate or inanimate, and the role of natural science is to study their constitution and the forces of life which are active in them or upon them. Now the law looks upon man not as a material being submitted to physical laws of life, but as a thinking man, a reasonable man, creating rules to limit his activity for the profit of the activity of others. The law considers this faculty of moral order in man, which we call reason, which, so to speak, has inspired him to create the law. It is for this reason that we classify the science of law among the so-called moral sciences.

But the law looks upon man not only as a moral being, but as a social being living in the midst of a social group. Now there are beside the law other manifestations of social life which may be studied scientifically. There is a science of religions, a science of morals, a science of intellectual products, political science, economic science, a science of human groups. Law is no exception. . . . The science of law is part of the group of sciences called social since they study social life under its different aspects. — May, Introduction à l'étude du droit (2 ed.) 53-54.

And it would appear that if a man, who through wisdom were able to become everything and to imitate everything should come into our city and should wish to show us his poems, we should honor him . . . but we should tell him that there is no such person with us in our city, nor is there any such allowed to be, and we should send him to some other city. — Plato, Republic, iii, 397-398. That is unjust which is contrary to the nature of rational creatures.

— Grotius, i, 1, 3, § 1.

From that law of nature by which we are obliged to transfer to another such rights as being retained hinder the peace of mankind, there followeth a third, which is this: "that men perform their covenants made;" without which covenants are in vain and but empty words, and the right of all men to all things remaining, we are still in a condition of war. And in this law of nature consisteth the fountain and original of justice. For where no covenant hath preceded, there hath no right been transferred and every man has right to everything, and consequently no action can be unjust. But when a covenant is made, then to break it is unjust; and the definition of injustice is no other than the not performance of covenant. And whatsoever is not unjust is just. . . . And therefore where there is no "own," that is, no property, there is no injustice; and where there is no coercive power erected, that is where there is no commonwealth, there is no property, all men having right to all things; therefore where there is no commonwealth, there nothing is unjust. So that the nature of justice consists in keeping of valid covenants; but the validity of covenants begins not but with the constitution of a civil power sufficient to compel men to keep them; and then it is also that property begins. — Hobbes, Leviathan, chap. 15.

Again, in the state of nature no one is by common consent master of anything, nor is there anything in nature which can be said to belong to one man rather than another. Hence in the state of nature we can conceive of no wish to render to every man his own or to deprive a man of that which belongs to him; in other words, there is nothing in the state of nature answering to justice and injustice. Such ideas are only possible in a social state, when it is decreed by common consent what belongs to one man and what to another. — Spinoza, Ethics, pt. iv, pr. 37, n. § 2 (Elwes' transl.).

I shall close this chapter and this book with a remark which ought to serve as a basis for the whole social system; it is that instead of destroying natural equality, the fundamental pact, on the contrary, substitutes a moral and lawful equality for the physical inequality which nature imposed upon men, so that though unequal in strength or intellect, they all become equal by convention and legal right. — Rousseau, Social Contract, bk. i, chap. 9 (Tozer's transl.).

Every action is right which in itself, or in the maxim on which it proceeds, is such that it can coexist along with the freedom of the will of each and all in action according to a universal law. — Kant, Rechtslehre, xxxv (Hastie's transl.).

As to the relation of this to the classical economics, see Cooke, Adam Smith and Jurisprudence, 51 L. Q. Rev. 326.

I must in all cases recognize the free being outside of me as such, that is, must limit my liberty by the possibility of his liberty. — I Fichte, Grundlage des Naturrechts, 49.

This is right: that existence generalized is existence of the free will. Accordingly, as a generalization, it is liberty as an idea. — Hegel, Grundlinien der Philosophie des Rechts, 61.

We may define right as a principle . . . governing the exercise of liberty in the relations of human life. — I Ahrens, Cours du Droit Naturel (8 ed.) 107.

Right is the sum of those universal determinations of action through which it happens that the ethical whole and its parts may be preserved and further developed. — Trendelenburg, Naturrecht, § 46.

The fundamental Axiom which forms the basis of the whole system of Natural Justice I conceive to be that one human being has no right to control for his own benefit the volition of another. — Phillipp, Jurisprudence, 80–81 (§ 1).

The ultimate object of positive law is identical with the proximate object of natural law — viz. liberty. But being realizable only by means of order, order is the proximate object of positive law. — Lorimer, Institutes of Law (2 ed.) 523.

Reduced to these terms, the difference between morality and right is a difference in degree and not of essence. Yet it is a very important difference, as it reduces the power of coercion to what is absolutely necessary for the harmonious coexistence of the individual with the whole. — I Liroy, Philosophy of Right (transl. by Hastie) 121.

Fundamental principles of justice:

(1) The first and highest fundamental principle of justice provides that every one hold every good which he has unhindered by the acts of any other.

(2) That for every value transferred, one receive in return an equal value.

(3) Every newly produced value belongs to the producer.

(4) Every destroyed good is to be destroyed to the destroyer, and if the destroyed good is another's, the destroyer suffers a subtraction from his own good until the injured person is compensated for his injury by an equivalent value. — Lasson, System der Rechtsphilosophie, § 24.

Right . . . [is] the correspondence or harmony of the will of the individual with the universal will. — Herkless, Lectures on Jurisprudence, 69.

The moral principle which protects the right is the inviolability of the human person. . . . This is the fundamental axiom upon which every doctrine of law may be and ought to be established. — I Boistel, Cours de philosophie du droit, 72.

(b) English utilitarians.

II Berolzheimer, System der Rechts- und Wirthschaftsphilosophie, § 28 (World's Legal Philosophies, 134-141); Markby, Elements of Law, §§ 51-59; Mill, On Liberty, chap. 4; Bentham, Theory of Legislation, Principles of the Civil Code, chaps. 1, 7; Dicey, Law and Public Opinion in England, lect. 6.

Bentham, Principles of Morals and Legislation (1780, reprinted by the Clarendon Press, 1879); id Traité de législation (ed by Dumont, 1802, transl. as Bentham's Theory of Legislation by Hildreth, 10 ed. 1904), id. I Works, Principles of the Civil Code, 295-364; Mill, On Liberty (1859).

See Albee, History of English Utilitarianism; Stephen, The English Utilitarians; Halévy, The Growth of Philosophic Radicalism (1928 — transl. by Morris) 35-87, 373-431; Solari, L'idea individuale e l'idea sociale nel diritto privato, §§ 31-36.

The ideas which underlie the Benthamite or individualistic scheme of reform may conveniently be summarized under three leading principles and two corollaries.

(1) Legislation is a science. . . .

(2) The right aim of legislation is the carrying out of the principle of utility, or, in other words, the proper end of every law is the promotion of the greatest happiness of the greatest number. . . .

(3) Every person is in the main and as a general rule the best judge of his own happiness. Hence legislation should aim at a removal of all those restrictions on the free action of an individual which are not necessary for securing the like freedom on the part of his neighbors. . . .

From these three guiding principles of legislative utilitarianism — the scientific character of sound legislation, the principle of utility, faith in laissez faire — English individualists have in practice deduced the two corollaries that the law ought to extend the sphere and enforce the obligation of contract, and that, as regards the possession of political power, every man ought to count for one man and no man ought to count for more than one. — Dicey, Law and Public Opinion in England (2 ed.) 134-149.

(c) The historical school.

In virtue of freedom man is the subject of right and law. His freedom is the foundation of right and all real relations of right emanate from it. . . .

In thus founding right upon the possibility of an act of will, the essential principle of right is indicated as that of equality. Right implies the recognition of freedom as belonging equally to all men as subjects of the power of will. It receives its material and contents from the impulse of man to refer to himself what exists out of himself. The function of right, as manifested in law, is to apply the principle of equality to the relations which arise from the operation of this impulse. — I Puchta, Cursus der Institutionen (Hastie's transl.) § 4.

Law exists for the sake of liberty; it has its basis in this, that men are beings endowed with a disposition to free exertion of will. It exists to protect liberty in that it limits caprice. — Arndts, Juristische Encyclopädie, § 12.

Justice is thus the condition of social equilibrium, both with reference to the domain of the rule of the will of persons, that is, with regard to the harmony of law and [individual] right, and with reference to the maintenance of the limits of action of different persons, or, in other words, to the mutual accommodation to each other of the several and distinct existing rights. — Pulszky, Theory of Law and Civil Society, § 173.

There is a guide which, when kept clearly and constantly in view, sufficiently informs us what we should aim to do by legislation and what should be left to other agencies. This is what I have so often insisted upon as the sole function both of law and legislation, namely, to secure to each individual the utmost liberty which he can enjoy consistently with the preservation of the like liberty to all others. Liberty, the first of blessings, the aspiration of every human soul, is the supreme object. Every abridgment of it demands an excuse, and the only good excuse is the necessity of preserving it. Whatever tends to preserve this is right, all else is wrong. To leave each man to work out in freedom his own happiness or misery, to stand or fall by the consequences of his own conduct, is the true method of human discipline. — Carter, Law: Its Origin, Growth and Function, 337.

(d) The positivists.

Hence that which we have to express in a precise way is the liberty of each limited only by the like liberties of all. This we do by saying: — Every man is free to do that which he wills provided he infringes not the equal freedom of any other man. — Spencer, Justice, § 27.

Compare: Our theory reconciles the idea of liberty with those of superior power and superior interest; right, concrete and complete, at the same time ideal and real, becomes the maximum of liberty, equal for all individuals, which is compatible with the maximum of liberty, of force and of interest for the social organism. — Fouillée, L'idée moderne du droit (6 ed.) 394.

Courcelle-Seneuil's parallel:

Ancient Ideal	Nineteenth-Century Ideal
1. Property founded on conquest.	1. Property founded on labor and saving.
2. Absolute power founded on military force.	2. Empire of laws freely assented to by all
3. Classification by privilege founded on tradition and the will of the government.	3. Classification founded on personal merit, tested by competition.
4. A stationary society, corrected from time to time by reversion to the ancient type.	4. A progressive society, constantly improving itself by labor and invention.
5. A society ruled by laws, under the supervision of a public authority invested with compulsory powers.	5. A society living by the free initiative of its citizens, regulated by the observance of the moral law.

Free association, liberty, which is confined to the maintaining of equality in the means of production and of equivalence in exchanges, is the only possible just and true form of society. Politics is the science of liberty; under whatever name it may be disguised, the government of man by man is oppression. The highest form of society is found in the union of order and anarchy. — I Proudhon, Oeuvres Complètes (1873 ed.) Qu'est-ce que la propriété? 224.

(2) Socialist individualism.

(See, post, pp. 204–205.)

Socialism in all its forms leaves intact the individualistic ends, but resorts to collective action as a new method of attaining them. That socialism is through and through individualistic in tendency, with emotional fraternalism superadded, is the point I would especially emphasize. Adler, The Conception of Social Welfare, Proceedings of the Conference on Legal and Social Philosophy (1913) 9.

It is the function of the state to further the development of the human race to a state of freedom. . . . It is the education and evolution of the human race to a state of freedom. Lassalle, Arbeiterprogramm (1863) I Werke (ed. by Blum) 156.

Take any demand, however slight, which any creature, however weak, may make. Ought it not for its own sole sake to be satisfied?

If not, prove why not. The only possible kind of proof you could adduce would be the exhibition of another creature who should make a demand that ran the other way. . . . Any desire is imperative to the extent of its amount; it makes itself valid by the fact that it exists at all. Some desires, truly enough, are small desires; they are put forward by insignificant persons, and we customarily make light of the obligations which they bring. But the fact that such personal demands as these impose small obligations does not keep the largest obligations from being personal demands. . . . After all, in seeking for a universal principle, we inevitably are carried onward to the most universal principle — that the essence of good is simply to satisfy demand. . . . Since everything which is demanded is by that fact a good, must not the guiding principle for ethical philosophy (since all demands conjointly cannot be satisfied in this poor world) be simply to satisfy at all times as many demands as we can? That act must be the best act, accordingly, which makes for the best whole, in the sense of awakening the least sum of dissatisfactions. In the casuistic scale, therefore, those ideals must be written highest which prevail at the least cost, or by whose realization the least number of other ideals are destroyed. . . . The course of history is nothing but the story of men's struggle from generation to generation to find the more inclusive order. Invent some manner of realizing your own ideals which will also satisfy the alien demands — that and that only is the path of peace! . . . Though some one's ideals are unquestionably the worse off for each improvement, yet a vastly greater total number of them find shelter in our civilized society than in the older savage ways. . . . As our present laws and customs have fought and conquered other past ones, so they will in their turn be overthrown by any newly discovered order which will hush up the complaints that they still give rise to without producing others louder still. — James, The Will to Believe, 195-206.

Justice to the individual, then, must according to these principles consist in the rendering to him, so far as possible, all those services, and surrounding him with all those conditions, which he requires for his highest self, for the satisfaction of those desires which his truest judgment tells him are good. Conversely, opportunity for fulfilment of highest aims is all that may be justly claimed as a right. — Willoughby, Social Justice, 20-21.

The satisfaction of every one's wants so far as they are not outweighed by others' wants. — Adapted from Ward, Applied Sociology, 22-24.

The old justice in the economic field consisted chiefly in securing to each individual his rights in property or contracts. The new justice must consider how it can secure for each individual a standard of living, and such a share in the values of civilization as shall make possible a full moral life. — Dewey and Tufts, Ethics, 496.

Justice . . . may be described as the effort to eliminate from our social conditions the effects of the inequalities of nature upon the happiness and advancement of man, and particularly to create an artificial environment which shall serve the individual as well as the race and tend to perpetuate noble types rather than those which are base. — Kelly, Government or Human Evolution: Justice, 360.

Fundamental principles of just law:

The principles of respect. — 1. The content of a person's will must not be subjected to the arbitrary will of another. 2. A rightful demand can only be maintained in the sense [i.e. in such manner, to such extent] that the person bound can still be "his own neighbor" [i.e. an end in himself, so as to make "just volition possible"].

The principles of participation. — 1. No person legally bound is to be excluded from the common interest arbitrarily. 2. A legally conferred power of disposition can only be exclusive in the sense that [i.e. so far as] the person excluded may still be "his own neighbor" [i.e. an end in himself]. — Stammler, Lehre von dem richtigen Rechte (2 ed.) 148, 150.

As to the phrase "his own neighbor" see Lehre von dem richtigen Rechte (2 ed.) 194-196 (Husik's transl 217-218).

Man has no rights, nor has the collectivity any rights. But every individual has a function to fulfill in society, a certain task to execute. This is the foundation of the principle of right and law which is imposed upon all, great and small, governors and governed. . . .

Every man has a social function to fulfill, and in consequence he has a social duty to fulfill it. He has the duty of developing his individuality, physical, intellectual and moral as fully as possible so as to fulfill it as well as possible, and none may hinder that free development. But one has no power of remaining inactive, of hindering the free development of his individuality. He has no right of inactivity, of idleness. Those who govern may intervene to impose work upon him. They may even regulate his work; for those who govern do no more in such case than impose upon him the obligation of fulfilling the social function incumbent upon him. — Duguit, Les transformations générales du droit privé depuis le code Napoléon, 20-21.

For the individualist conception, work values and collective values are at the service of the personality values. Civilization is but a means of personal education. The state and the law are but institutions to guarantee the security and the development of the individual. For the superindividualist conception, personal values and work values are at the service of collective values. Morals and civilization are put at the service of the state and of the law. . . . For the transpersonalist conception, personal values and collective values are at the service of work values. Morals, law and the state are at the service of civilization. . . . For individualism the highest end is freedom, for superindividualism the highest end is the nation or state, for transpersonalism it is civilization. — Radbruch, Rechtsphilosophie (3 ed.) 54-55.

I do not think so ill of our jurisprudence as to suppose that its principles are so remote from the ordinary needs of civilized society and the ordinary claims it makes upon its members as to deny a legal remedy where there is so obviously a social wrong. — Lord Atkin in Donoghue v. Stevenson [1932] A.C. 562, 583.

The only possible objective . . . is the welfare of the community. — p. 24.

There can never be a question of public benefit in any higher ethical sense, but only in the sense of what is to be considered useful for the community according to the estimate actually prevailing in the community. — p. 135.

PART 3

THE NATURE OF LAW

IX. THEORIES OF LAW

Pound, Theories of Law, 22 Yale L. J. 114.

The different meanings of the term "law": (1) The legal order — a regime of adjusting relations and regulating conduct; (2) the body of authoritative grounds of or guides to decision and administrative action under a legal order; (3) the judicial and the administrative process under a legal order.

Unification of these by the idea of social control.

Law as a body of precepts or norms.

Standpoints and resulting conception of law in the second sense.

The standpoint of the individual subject to the law — (a) a body of rules or norms of conduct; (b) a body of threats of application of the force of politically organized society.

The standpoint of the judge or of the administrative official — a body of rules or norms of decision.

The standpoint of the counselor — bases of prediction.

The standpoint of the entrepreneur — a body of business devices.

Two ideas of law as a body of rules or norms of conduct, illustrated by two sets of words:

Greek	τὸ δίκαιον	νόμος
Latin	ius	lex
German	Recht	Gesetz
French	droit	loi
Italian	diritto	legge
Spanish	derecho	ley

Compare English, law, a law.

1. Greek definitions.

What the ruling part of the state enacts after considering what ought to be done, is called law. — Xenophon (B.C. c.429-c.356) Memorabilia, i, 2, § 43.

Law is a definite statement according to a common agreement of the state giving warning how everything ought to be done. — Anax-imenes (B.C. c.560-c.500) quoted by Aristotle, Rhetoric to Alexander, i.

Law seeks to be the finding out of reality. — [?] Plato (B.C. 427-347) Minos, 315A.

The common law, going through all things, which is the same with Zeus who administers the whole universe. — Chrysippus (B.C. 287-209) quoted by Diogenes Laertius, vii, 88.

This is law, which all men ought to obey for many reasons, and chiefly because every law is both a discovery and a gift of God and a teaching of wise men and a setting right of wrongs, intended and not intended, but also a common agreement of the state, according to which every one in the state ought to live. — Demosthenes (B.C. 384-322) Against Aristogeiton, 774.

2. Roman definitions.

Law (lex) is the highest reason, implanted in nature, which commands what ought to be done and prohibits the contrary. — Cicero (B.C. 106-43) De Legibus, i, 6.

Law (lex) is the right reason of commanding and prohibiting. — Id. i, 5.

For law (lex) is nothing else than right reason derived from the gods commanding what is honorable and forbidding the contrary. — Id. Philippic. xi, 12.

Compare: A lex is a general command of the people or of the plebs upon question by a magistrate. — Capito (ob. A.D. 22) quoted by Aulus Gellius, x, 20, 2.

Moreover the laws (iura) of the Roman people consist of statutes (leges), enactments of the plebeians (plebiscita), resolves of the senate (senatus consulta), enactments of the emperor, edicts of those who have authority to issue them, and the answers of those learned in the law (responsa prudentium). — Gaius, i, § 2.

When about to study law we ought first to know whence comes the word law (ius). Moreover it is called law (ius) from justice (iustitia) for, as Celsus [a jurist of the end of the first or beginning of the second century A.D.] well defines it, law (ius) is the art of what is right and equitable. — Ulpian (third century A.D.) in Digest, i, 1, 1, pr.

3. The earlier Middle Ages.

As to the use of lex to mean law in general in this period, see I Savigny, Geschichte des römischen Rechts im Mittelalter, § 37 (Cathcart's transl. 115-121).

Fas is divine law (lex), ius is human law (lex). . . . Lex is a written enactment. Mos is usage approved by time or unwritten law (lex). . . . Moreover usage is a certain law (ius) instituted by observance which is held for enactment (lex) when enacted law (lex) is wanting. — Isidore of Seville (ob. 636) II Bruns, Fontes Iuris Romani Antiqui (6 ed.) 83.

Ius is the art of what is right and equitable. Lex is ius enacted by wise princes. — Petri Exceptiones Legum Romanorum, app. I; Fitting, Juristische Schriften des früheren Mittelalters, 164 (11th century).

Ius is the general term, so called because just; lex moreover is a species of ius and is so called from legere (to read) because it is written. Now all ius consists of leges and customs. Lex is an enactment of princes written down for the common good; custom is ancient usage derived from conduct (moribus), or unwritten lex. — Libellus de Urbis Legalibus, 1, appended to the foregoing; Fitting, 181.

4. Development of the conception and definition of law from the revival of legal study at Bologna (twelfth century) to the time of Grotius (seventeenth century).

Pound, A Comparison of Ideals of Law, 47 Harv. L. Rev. 1, 5-11.

Corpus iuris civilis believed to be binding statute law, and hence lex.

Law made up of the corpus iuris as interpreted by jurists and contemporary enactment, on the one hand, and of customary law of various peoples on the other.

Ius is the genus and lex the species. All ius consists of enactments and customs. Lex is a written enactment. Custom is long usage. Usage is a certain kind of law (lex), instituted by observance, which is held for enactment (lex) when enacted law (lex) is wanting. — Gratian, cc. 2-5, dist. I (about 1150).

For the English laws (leges), although not written, may as it should seem, and that without any absurdity, be termed laws (since this itself is a law — that which pleases the prince has the force of law). . . . For if from the mere want of writing only they should not be considered as laws, then unquestionably writing would seem to confer more authority upon laws themselves than either the equity of the persons constituting or the reason of those framing them. — Glanvill, De Legibus et Consuetudinibus Regni Angliae, Preface (Beames' transl.) xi (about 1189).

Theory of St. Thomas Aquinas (1225 [or 1227]–1274):

The old ius naturale divided into lex aeterna (eternal law) the "reason of the divine wisdom, governing the whole universe."

lex naturalis (natural law) the law of human nature proceeding ultimately from God, but immediately from human reason, and governing the actions of men only.

Positive law a mere recognition of the lex naturalis, which is above all human authority.

See Summa Theologica, 1, 2, qq. 92–95 (transl. in Rickaby, Aquinas Ethicus, 274–288).

A law is a rule and measure of acts, whereby one is induced to act or is restrained from action. Now the rule and measure of human acts is reason: it being the part of reason to direct to the end, which is the first principle of conduct. Hence a law must be some function of reason. — Thomas Aquinas, Summa Theologica, 1, 2, q. 90, art. 1 (Rickaby's transl.).

A law is . . . an ordinance of reason for the general good, emanating from him who has the care of the community, and promulgated. — Id. 1, 2, q. 90, art. 4.

Every law framed by man bears the character of a law exactly to that extent to which it is derived from the law of nature. But if on any point it is in conflict with the law of nature, it at once ceases to be a law: it is a mere perversion of law. — Id. 1, 2, § 95, art. 2.

Law (lex) is a holy sanction, commanding what is right and prohibiting the contrary. — Fortescue, De Laudibus Legum Angliae, cap. 3 (about 1468).

As natural law was discoverable by reason, the obvious effect was to require all rules of positive law to be tested by reason. Hence: "The first is the law eternal. The second is the law of nature of reasonable creatures, the which, as I have heard say, is called by them that be learned in the law of England, the law of reason." — Doctor and Student (Temp. Henry VIII) Intr.

A law (lex) of nature is a rule of reason; wherefore a human law (lex) partakes of the reason of law (lex) in so far as it is derived from a law of nature. And if they disagree in anything, there is no law but a corruption of law. — R. Suarez, Repetitiones, 272–273 (1558).

The proper signification of ius is one, namely, when ius is used to mean an enactment directing on behalf of the government those things which are right. . . . From this signification other less proper meanings have sprung. — Donellus, De iure civili, I, 3, § 2 (1589).

Ius from iussum. And hence the word iur. For I agree with those who consider that we say iur from iubere so that iur is as if you should say iussum. . . . For all law (iur) commands as is expressed in the definition of iur. . . .

Some [he cites Alciatus] hold that iur is said by metathesis, so that iur is, as it were, iur with the letters reversed. This does not agree with the fact. — Id. I, 4, §§ 1-2.

5. Development of the conception and definition from Grotius to Kant (seventeenth and eighteenth centuries).

Pound, A Comparison of Ideals of Law, 47 Harv. L. Rev. 1, 12-15.

Grotius puts natural law on a rational instead of a theological basis.

Hotman, Antitribonianus, cap. 12 (1567) had attacked the authority of Justinian.

Conring (1643) overturns the mediaeval notion of the statutory authority of the corpus iuris

Thus natural law became once more iur naturale, the dictates of reason in view of the exigencies of human constitution and human society, no longer lex naturalis, the enactments of a supernatural legislator.

And positive law became the application of reason to the civil relations of men, of which the corpus iuris was an exponent only because and to the extent of its inherent reasonableness.

[After defining iur in the ethical sense, that which is right, and iur in the sense of a right.] There is also a third signification in which it means the same as lex when that word is used in its broadest sense, so that it is a rule of moral actions obliging to that which is right. — Grotius, De iure belli ac pacis, i, 1, 9, § 1 (1625).

Law (la loi) in general is human reason. — Montesquieu, L'esprit des lois (1748) i, 3.

A rule to which men are obliged to make their moral actions conformable. — I Rutherford, Institutes of Natural Law (1754) 1, § 1.

In England following the period of legislative energy during the Commonwealth, Hobbes saw chiefly the imperative element.

Civil law is to every subject those rules which the commonwealth hath commanded him . . . to make use of for the distinction of right and wrong; that is to say of what is contrary and not contrary to the rule. — Hobbes, Leviathan (1651) chap. 26.

With the rise of a national law on the Continent, lex begins to stand for the rules of the civil law in each state.

A law (lex) is an enactment by which a superior obliges one subject to him to direct his actions according to the command of the former. — Pufendorf, Elementa iurisprudentiae universalis (1672) def. 13.

In the eighteenth century the effect of an age of absolute government in reviving the conception of law as enactment becomes marked.

A rule prescribed by the sovereign of a society to his subjects. — Burlamaqui, Principes du droit naturel (1747) 8, 2.

Law is the expression of the general will. — Rousseau, Contrat social (1762) ii, 6.

Blackstone attempted to combine the two ideas.

A rule of civil conduct, prescribed by the supreme power in a state, commanding what is right and prohibiting what is wrong. — I Blackstone, Commentaries (1765) 44.

See I Blackstone, 41, 43, 47, 123, 160-161; Finch, Law (1613) bk. i, chap. 6.

6. Further development from Kant to Jhering.

(a) Metaphysical.

The sum of the circumstances according to which the will of one may be reconciled with the will of another according to a common rule of freedom. — Kant, Metaphysische Anfangsgründe der Rechtslehre (1797) 27.

Man stands in the midst of the external world, and the most important element in his environment is contact with those who are like him in their nature and destiny. If free beings are to co-exist in such a condition of contact, furthering rather than hindering each other in their development, invisible boundaries must be recognized within which the existence and activity of each individual gains a secure free opportunity. The rules whereby such boundaries are determined and through them this free opportunity is secured are the law. — I Savigny, System des heutigen römischen Rechts (1840) § 52.

The organic whole of the external conditions of life measured by reason. — Krause, Abriss des Systemes der Philosophie des Rechtes (1828) 209.

The recognition of the just freedom which manifests itself in persons, in their exertions of will and in their influence upon objects. — I Puchta, Cursus der Institutionen (1841) § 6.

An aggregate of rules which determine the mutual relations of men living in a community. — Arndts, Juristische Encyklopädie (1850) § 1.

The rule or standard governing as a whole the conditions for the orderly attainment of whatever is good, or assures good for the individual or society, so far as those conditions depend on voluntary action. — Ahrens, Rechtsphilosophische Einleitung, in Holtzendorff, Encyklopädie der Rechtswissenschaft (1 ed. 1871 — transl. by Pollock).

The expression of the idea of right involved in the relation of two or more human beings. — Miller, Philosophy of Law (1884) 9.

The aggregate of the rules which provide for the employment of the force of society to restrain those who infringe the liberty of others. — Acolas, Introduction à l'étude du droit (1885) 2.

The sum of the conditions of social coexistence with regard to the activity of the community and of individuals. — Pulszky, Theory of Law and Civil Society (1888) 312.

The sum of moral rules which grant to persons living in a community a certain power over the outside world. — Sohm, Institutes of Roman Law (1 ed. 1889, § 7 — transl. by Ledlie).

(b) Eighteenth-century and Neo-Rousseauist.

Those rules of intercourse between men which are deduced from their rights and moral claims; the expression of the jural and moral relations of men to one another. — Woolsey, International Law (1871) § 3.

The recognition of the law of nature by special enactments and its vindication in special circumstances and relations. — Lorimer, Institutes of Law (1880) 9.

The aggregate of received principles of justice. — Smith, Elements of Right and of the Law (1887) § 231.

The will of the state concerning the civic conduct of those under its authority. — Woodrow Wilson, The State (1898) § 1415.

A rule agreed upon by the people regulating the rights and duties of persons. — Andrews, American Law (1900) § 72.

Law is a body of rules for human conduct within a community which by common consent of this community shall be enforced by external power. — I Oppenheim, International Law (1905) § 5.

(c) Later historical.

The sum of the rules which fix the relations of men living in society — or at least of the rules which are sanctioned by the society — imposed upon the individual by a social constraint. — Brissaud, Manuel d'histoire du droit français (1898) 3.

The rule of conduct to which a society gives effect in respect to the behavior of its subjects toward others and toward itself and in respect to the forms of its activity. — Merkel in Holtzendorff, Enzyklopädie der Rechtswissenschaft (5 ed. 1890) 5.

A rule expressing the relations of human conduct conceived as subject to realization by state force. — II Wigmore, Cases on Torts (1911) app. A, § 3.

(d) Analytical.

(1) French. Influence of the French Code.

The civil law is, therefore, a rule of conduct upon a subject of common interest prescribed to all citizens by their lawful sovereign. It is the solemn declaration of the legislative power, by which it commands, under certain penalties or subject to certain rewards, what each citizen ought to do or not to do or to permit for the common good of society. — I Toullier, Droit civil français (1808) § 14.

A law (loi) is a rule established by the authority which, according to the political constitution, has the power of commanding, or prohibiting, or of permitting throughout the state. A law truly and properly so-called, therefore, . . . is a rule sanctioned by the public power, a rule civilly and juridically obligatory. Law (droit) is the result, or better, the aggregate or totality of these rules. — I Demolombe, Cours de Code Napoléon (1845) § 2.

Law (loi) is a rule established by a superior will in order to direct human actions. . . . The law (droit) . . . sometimes the rules of law (lois) seen in their aggregate, or more often the general result of their dispositions. — I Demante, Cours analytique de code civil (1849) §§ 1-2.

What is law (droit)? It is the aggregate, or rather the resultant, of the dispositions of the laws (lois) to which man is subjected, with the power of following or of violating them. . . . Now these laws (lois) are rules of conduct established by a competent authority. — I Marcadé, Explication du Code Napoléon (5 ed. 1859) § 1.

One may say with Portalis that law (la loi) is a solemn declaration of the will of the sovereign upon an object of common interest. — I Laurent, Principes du droit civil français (1878) § 2.

Obligatory rules of conduct, general and permanent, established for men by the temporal sovereign. — Varennes-Sommières, Principes fondamentaux de droit (1889) 12.

Law (droit) is the aggregate of precepts or laws (lois) governing the conduct of man toward his fellows, the observance of which it is possible, and at the same time just and useful, to assure by way of external coercion. — Baudry-Lacantinerie, Précis de droit civil (10 ed. 1908) i, § 1.

The ensemble of the rules to which the external conduct of man in his relations with his fellows is subjected, and which, under the inspiration of the natural idea of justice, in a given state of the collective consciousness of humanity, appearing susceptible of a social sanction where coercion is required, are or tend to be provided with such a sanction and thenceforth take the form of categorical injunctions governing particular wills for the purpose of assuring order in society. — I Génay, Science et technique en droit privé positif (1914) 51.

The ensemble of precepts, rules, or laws which govern human activity in society, the observance whereof is sanctioned in case of need by social constraint, otherwise called public force. — I Colin et Capitant, Droit civil français (1914) 1.

(2) Anglo-American.

First Stage. — The imperative theory perfected; eighteenth-century ideas eliminated.

Of the laws or rules set by men to men, some are established by political superiors, sovereign and subject: by persons exercising supreme and subordinate government in independent nations or independent political societies. The aggregate of the rules thus established, or some aggregate forming a portion of that aggregate, is the appropriate matter of jurisprudence, general or particular. To the aggregate of the rules thus established, or to some aggregate forming a portion of that aggregate, the term law, as used simply and strictly, is exclusively applied. — Austin, The Province of Jurisprudence Determined (1832) 2.

A command proceeding from the supreme political authority of a state and addressed to the persons who are the subjects of that authority. — Amos, Science of Law (1874) 48.

The general body of rules which are addressed by the rulers of the political society to the members of that society, and which are generally obeyed. — Markby, Elements of Law (1871) § 9.

A law is a command; that is to say it is the signification by a lawgiver to a person obnoxious to evil of the lawgiver's wish that such person should do or forbear to do some act, with an intimation of an evil that will be inflicted in case the wish be disregarded. — Poste, Gaius (1871) 2.

Second Stage. — Influence of the historical school: enforcement substituted for enactment.

A general rule of external human action enforced by a sovereign political authority. — Holland, Jurisprudence (1880) chap. 3.

Rules of conduct defined by the state as those which it will enforce, for the enforcement of which it employs a uniform constraint. — I Anson, Law and Custom of the Constitution (1886) 8.

The sum of the rules of justice administered in a state and by its authority. — Pollock, First Book of Jurisprudence (1896) 17.

The aggregate of rules administered mediately or immediately by the state's supreme authority, or regulating the constitution and functions of that supreme authority itself; the ultimate sanction being in both cases disapproval by the bulk of the members of that state. — Clark, Practical Jurisprudence (1883) 172.

Third Stage. — Enforcement by tribunals substituted for enforcement by the sovereign.

The law of every country . . . consists of all the principles, rules, or maxims enforced by the courts of that country as being supported by the authority of the state. — Dicey, Private International Law as a Branch of the Law of England (1890) 6 L. Q. Rev. 3.

The law or laws of a society are the rules in accordance with which the courts of that society determine cases, and by which, therefore, the members of that society are to govern themselves; and the circumstance which distinguishes these rules from other rules for conduct, and which makes them the law, is the fact that courts do act upon them. — Gray, Definitions and Questions in Jurisprudence (1892) 6 Harv. L. Rev. 24.

The sum of the rules administered by courts of justice. — Pollock and Maitland, History of English Law (1 ed. 1895) Introduction, xxv.

The rules recognized and acted on in courts of justice. — Salmond, Jurisprudence (1902) § 5.

The rules and principles recognized and applied by the state's authorities, judicative and executive. — I Clark, Roman Private Law: Jurisprudence (1914) 75.

7. German definitions after Jhering: influence of German legislation.

The sum of the rules of constraint which obtain in a state. — I Jhering, Der Zweck im Recht (1877) 320.

The rule armed with force first gives us the conception of law. That which does not possess the guarantee lying in force cannot be called law. — Lasson, System der Rechtsphilosophie (1882) 207.

Law is a peaceable ordering (Friedensordnung) of the external relations of men and their communities to each other. It is an ordering (norma agendi), a regulating through the setting up of commands and prohibitions. — Gareis, Encyklopädie der Rechtswissenschaft (1887) § 5.

The purpose of all law is a determinate external behavior of men toward men. The means of attaining this purpose, wherein alone the law consists, are norms or imperatives. — I Bierling, Juristische Prinzipienlehre (1894) § 3.

The legal order is an adjustment through coercion of the relations of human life arising in a social manner from the social nature of man. — Kohler, Einführung in die Rechtswissenschaft (1902) § 1.

Law is the ordering of the relations of life guaranteed by the general will. — I Dernburg, Das bürgerliches Recht des deutschen Reichs und Preussens (1903) § 16.

Law is the ordering (Ordnung) based upon autonomous government in a state of civilization. — III Berolzheimer, System der Rechts- und Wirthschaftsphilosophie (1906) § 17.

8. Recent definitions from present-day standpoints.

Pound, Progress of the Law — Analytical Jurisprudence, 1914-1927, 41 Harv. L. Rev. 174; id. Fifty Years of Jurisprudence, 50 Harv. L. Rev. 557, 566-571.

(a) Philosophical.

In the present, with its political storms which have shaken the consciousness-of-right of men and of peoples, in a time of confusion which looks upon law sometimes as sheer force, sometimes only as ideal powerlessness, we must call mankind back to a consciousness that law is neither the one nor the other, but rather might in the service of the idea of society, external coercion as the basis of freedom, form of the national community life, in which alone the individual may be free and may strive to fulfill in his person the idea of humanity. — Binder, Philosophie des Rechts (1925) 1063.

(b) Normative-analytical.

The norms of a customarily followed, comprehensive, and permanent supreme power. — Somló, Juristische Grundlehre (1917) 105.

Law is the legitimate order given to a human subject, individual or collective, bound to execute to the profit of another subject (entitled to claim from him the execution thereof) that an external fact be followed by another external fact, in default thereof by a third, and so on, with prescribed application of physical constraint to certain links in this chain. — I Roguin, La science juridique pure (1923) 122.

The delimitation of what men and groups of men are at liberty to do or not to do without incurring a condemnation, an execution, or some particular putting in play of force. — Lévy-Ullmann, La définition du droit (1917) 165.

Legislation and custom . . . rest upon the constitution, which in the sense of legal logic is the ultimate norm, the final source of the system of law. The decisive element for the positivity of law which gives law the character of a self-sufficient system, distinct from all other systems of norms, independent, and closed within itself, lies in this norm [i.e. the constitution] as the highest, derivable from nothing beyond, through the quality of sovereignty lent by this ultimate norm to the whole system of law raised out of it. — Kelsen, Das Problem der Souveränität (1920) 94.

The legal norm refers to the conduct of two entities: the citizen, against whose delict the coercive measure of the sanction is directed; and the organ that is to apply the coercive measure to the delict. The function of the legal norm consists in attaching the sanction as a consequence to certain conditions among which the delict plays a leading part. Looked at from a sociological point of view, the essential characteristic of law, by which it is distinguished from all other social mechanisms, is the fact that it seeks to bring about socially desired conduct by acting against contrary socially undesired conduct — the delict — with a sanction which the individual involved will deem an evil. — Kelsen, The Pure Theory of Law and Analytical Jurisprudence (1941) 55 Harv. L. Rev. 44, 58.

(c) Sociological.

The reason why people will pay lawyers to argue for them or to advise them, is that in societies like ours the command of the public force is intrusted to the judges in certain cases, and the whole power of the state will be put forth, if necessary, to carry out their judgments and decrees. People want to know under what circumstances and how far they will run the risk of coming against what is so much stronger than themselves, and hence it becomes a business to find out when this danger is to be feared. The object of our study, then, is prediction, the prediction of the incidence of public force through the instrumentality of the courts. . . . For the most important and pretty nearly the whole meaning of every new effort of legal thought is to make these prophecies more precise and to generalize them into a thoroughly connected system. . . . The prophecies of what courts will do in fact, and nothing more pretentious, are what I mean by the law. — Holmes, The Path of the Law (1897) 10 Harv. L. Rev. 457, 460, 461.

The limitations imposed upon the free activity of each in the interest of the general peace are expressed in the form of rules of conduct which every man ought to observe in his relations with his fellows. These rules, these precepts to be observed by men in their relations with each other, constitute the law. — May, Introduction à la science du droit (2 ed. 1925) 5.

A system of canons of valuation of social relations. — Perassi, Introduzione alle scienze giuridiche (1922) 23.

A principle or rule of conduct so established as to justify a prediction with reasonable certainty that it will be enforced by the courts if its authority is challenged. — Cardozo, The Growth of the Law (1924) 52.

Law is the ensemble of rules, imperative or permissive, the violation of which will provoke such feelings of dissatisfaction of a special nature in the social group where they are in force that the speedy appeasement of those feelings will be desirable in the interest of maintaining the peaceful character of social relations in that group. — Stoop, Analyse de la notion du droit (1927) 229.

(d) Realist.

From the point of view of the judge, the law may fairly be said to be the judging process or the power to pass judgment. — Frank, Law and the Modern Mind (1930) 274, note.

This doing of something about disputes, this doing of it reasonably, is the business of the law. And the people who have the doing of it in charge, whether they be judges or sheriffs or clerks or jailers or lawyers, are officials of the law. What these officials do about disputes is, to my mind, the law itself. — Llewellyn, The Bramble Bush (1930) 3.

A practical not a mere academic question.

(a) Cases where a state constitution or a state statute having been construed by the highest court of the state, and legal transactions having been entered into on the faith of the interpretation, the state court changes its view in later decisions with the effect that the transactions will not be upheld in the state courts.

1. Analytical.

Austin, Jurisprudence, Analysis of Lectures 1-6 (5 ed. 81-85) lect. 1; Hobbes, Leviathan, pt. II, chap. 26, par. 6; Bentham, A Comment on the Commentaries, §§ I-VI, VIII; Holland, Jurisprudence, chaps. 2, 3; Markby, Elements of Law, §§ 1-26; Pollock, First Book of Jurisprudence, chap. 1; Salmond, Jurisprudence, §§ 5, 16, 17; Brown, The Austinian Theory of Law, §§ 552-639; I Clark, Roman Private Law: Jurisprudence, § 2; Jhering, Law as a Means to an End (transl. by Husik) 233-246.

Difficulties in the way of analytical theories:

(a) No analytical definition of anything undergoing evolution will adequately apply to all stages of development.

(b) Analysis of one element of a system of legal precepts has been made to stand for an analysis of law.

Hence the analytical theory does not cover the legal order nor all of the body of authoritative grounds of or guides to decision; it excludes the element of finding grounds of decision outside of the body of authoritative precepts, even if not outside of the legal order, and excludes the discretionary or administrative element in the judicial process.

(c) The analytical theory has been worked out chiefly from the standpoint of the individual, at the crisis of action, seeking a rule of conduct, or of the judge, at the crisis of decision, seeking a rule of or guide to decision. It ignores other standpoints which require to be considered.

Austin's analysis.

(a) Its presuppositions:

(1) That law is an aggregate of laws.

I Bentham, Works (Bowring ed.) 141.

(2) That a law is a rule of human action.

(3) An analytical separation or distribution of powers.

(b) Its details—laws are found to be:

(1) Commands set by a sovereign to subjects.

Meaning of "command," of "sovereign."

Difficulty of reconciling the origin of legal precepts through adjudication with the theory of a law as a command.

The doctrine of "tacit command."

Pope, English Common Law in the United States, 24 Harv. L. Rev 6; Williams v. Miles, 68 Neb. 463, 470.

(2) Rules set by a determinate authority.

(3) Rules of general application.

(4) Rules dealing with external human action.

(5) Rules backed by sanctions.

"A legal proposition without legal compulsion behind it is a contradiction in itself; a fire that burns not, a light that shines not." I Jhering, Der Zweck im Recht (3 ed.) 322

Modification by later analytical jurists: Law as that which is enforced by the state or by its judicial organs, not as that which is set by the state.

The norm theory: Law as a body of norms (models or patterns) of conduct or of decision established or recognized by the state in the administration of justice.

The hierarchy of norms.

See the reports on this subject presented before the International Congress of Comparative Law in 1933, III Acta Academiae Universalis Jurisprudentiae Comparativae, 1-68; Pound, Hierarchy of Sources and Forms in Different Systems of Law (1933) 7 Tulane L. Rev. 475.

Suggested analysis:

(a) The legal order — a regime of adjusting relations and ordering conduct.

(b) The body of authoritative grounds of or guides to judicial decision and administrative action.

(1) The precept element.

i. Rules.

ii. Principles.

iii. Precepts defining conceptions.

iv. Precepts defining standards.

(2) The technique element — a received technique of finding grounds of decision in the body of authoritative precepts and of developing and applying them.

(3) The ideal element — received ideals of the social and legal order, of the end of law and so of what legal precepts should be and how they should be developed and applied in the light thereof.

(c) The judicial and administrative processes.

Results of legal history:

Primitive law:

- (a) has no imperative element or, at least, that element is not well differentiated;
- (b) is not set by a determinate authority;
- (c) has no sanction or, at least, sanction is feebly developed;
- (d) is recognized rather than enforced.

Historical view of sanction:

The habit of obedience (Maine, International Law, 50-52).

As to the terminology of ethics in this connection see Eckstein, Die Entwertung ethischer Ausdrücke, XXII Archiv für Rechts- und Wirtschaftsphilosophie, 434. As to the meaning of "morals," "morality," "ethics," see Lee, Morals and Morality, 38 Internat. Journ. of Ethics, 450.

1. Historical view.

Law and morality have a common origin, but diverge in their development.

Four stages in the development of law in this respect may be noted:

(a) The stage of undifferentiated ethical custom, custom of popular action, and law.

(b) The stage of strict law — codified or crystallized custom which in time is outstripped by morality.

(c) The stage of infusion of morality and morals into law.

(d) The stage of conscious lawmaking.

2. Philosophical view.

Older views.

Natural law and positive law.

Practical results of this notion in legal history.

The theory can be held with safety only at a time when absolute theories of morals obtain.

Newer views.

Teleological (Jhering).

The ideals of an epoch (Stammler).

Evolutionary (Kohler).

Antinomic (Radbruch).

Justice has to do with the relations between men; the moral ideal with men themselves. Justice looks to an ideal social order; the moral ideal to an ideal man.

Revived natural law.

Moór, Das Problem des Naturrechts, 28 Archiv für Rechts und Sozialphilosophie, 325.

Sociological.

See Cardozo, The Nature of the Judicial Process, lect. 3; Ehrlich, Grundlegung der Sociologie des Rechts, chap. 4; Kornfeld, Soziale Machtverhältnisse, § 16; Wurzel, Das juristische Denken, 62-66 (transl. in Science of Legal Method, 371-377); Gurvitch, L'idée du droit social, 95-113; Petrazyski, Ueber die Motive des Handelns und über das Wesen der Moral und des Rechts, 50-58.

3. Analytical view.

Contact of law and morals in:

- (a) Judicial choice of starting points for legal reasoning;
- (b) interpretation of laws;
- (c) application of standards;
- (d) judicial discretion.

So far as a complete separation of judicial and legislative functions is possible, the distinction is — law is for the judge; morals are for the lawmaker.

Distinction between law and morals in respect of application and subject-matter:

- (a) Morals look to thought and feeling, law looks to acts.

Ethics aims at perfecting the individual character of men.

Law seeks only to regulate the relations of individuals with each other and with the state.

As to the Good Samaritan doctrine, see Dutch Penal Code, Art. 450; German Civil Code, § 826; Stammler, Lehre von dem richtigen Rechte, 489-490; 2 Planck, Bürgerliches Gesetzbuch (3 ed.) 995 (§ 826 note e); Bentham, Principles of Morals and Legislation (Clarendon Press Reprint) 322-323; id. Theory of Legislation (transl. by Hildreth, 5 ed.) 65-66; Livingston, Draft Code of Crimes and Punishments for the State of Louisiana, II, 126-127; Macaulay, Notes to Draft of Indian Penal Code, chap. XVIII, § 294, and note M, pp. 53-56; American Law Institute, Restatement of the Law of Torts, § 192.

(b) Moral principles must be applied with reference to circumstances and individuals; legal rules are typically of general and absolute application.

Laws must act in gross and so more or less in the rough.

(c) Law does not necessarily approve what it does not condemn,

(d) Rules may be required for cases where there is no fault, or is equal or contributing fault, and where there is equal moral claim.

(e) Resistance to law may be moral but cannot be legal.

The "right of revolution." I Wilson, Works (Andrews' ed.) 18; I Andrews, American Law (2 ed.) § 103.

Developed law is and must be scientific.

1. The legal theory of the state.

Willoughby, The Fundamental Concepts of Public Law, chaps. 1-3, 5-7.

The purpose is to set forth the legal theory of the state.

Not political theories of the state.

Not philosophical theories of the state.

The legal theory has reference to the immediate practical source of rules and sanctions.

Political theories have reference to the ultimate practical source of rules and sanctions.

Philosophical theories have reference to the ultimate moral source of rules and sanctions.

A state is a permanent political organization, supreme within and independent of legal control from without.

"The subject of will which imposes a legal order." Del Vecchio, Sulla Statualità del Diritto, 9 Rivista internazionale di filosofia del diritto (1929) 1; see English transl. The Statuality of the Law, 19 Journal of Comparative Legislation and International Law, 1, 8; German version Ueber die Staatlichkeit des Rechts, 8 Zeitschrift für öffentliches Recht, 510, 517 (there is also a French version).

The state as a person.

Willoughby, The Fundamental Concepts of Public Law, chap. 4; I Wolff, Organschaft und juristische Person (1933) 232-441.

For a full exposition and critique of theories of state and law from the beginning of the nineteenth century to the present, see Sander, Staat und Recht, (2 vols. 1922).

2. Anglo-American theory of sovereignty.

Dickinson, A Working Theory of Sovereignty, 42 Political Science

Q. 524; 43 id. 32; Willoughby, The Fundamental Concepts of Public Law, chaps. 8, 9, 12-15.

See also Hallis, Corporate Personality, Introduction, i-lxiii; Brown, The Austinian Theory of Law, Excursus A, B, 254-285; McIlwain, The Growth of Political Thought in the West, chap. 7; Ward, Sovereignty (1928); Orfield, Sovereignty and the Federal Amending Powers, 16 Iowa L. Rev. 391, 504.

The state is the whole of the political society in its corporate aspect.

The sovereign is that organ or that complex of organs which exercises its governmental functions.

"Consent of the governed" is a political, not a legal theory.

Sovereignty is the aggregate of powers possessed by the ruler or the ruling organs of a political society.

"By sovereignty is meant the aggregate of all civil and political power." Harper, J. in State v. Hunt, 20 S. C. Law (2 Hill, Law) 1, 250.

It may be:

(a) Internal — the sovereign is legally paramount over all action within.

(b) External — the sovereign is independent of all legal control from without.

I, chap. 2; Salmond, Jurisprudence, §§ 6, 7, 9, 10, 18-20, 26-29; Markby, Elements of Law, § 201; Amos, Science of Law, chap. 14; Korkunov, General Theory of Law (transl. by Hastings) §§ 41, 49; Demogue, Les principes fondamentales du droit privé, pt. I, chaps. 2-3.

1. The administration of justice — the legal order.

Systems of social control in the society of today:

- (a) Religion.
- (b) Public opinion.
- (c) Ethics of professions and trade and business organizations.
- (d) Administration of justice by the state.

2. Justice without law.

Law is not theoretically essential to the administration of justice.

Examples of justice without law:

In legal history.

In modern states.

Salmond, First Principles of Jurisprudence, 89-90; Grotius, De jure belli ac pacis (Whewell's transl.) ii, 26, 1; I Ahrens, Cours de droit naturel (8 ed.) 177; Lasson, Rechtsphilosophie, 238-239; Gareis, Science of Law (transl. by Kocourek) § 6; Pulszky, Theory of Law and Civil Society, § 174; Stammer, Theorie der Rechtswissenschaft, 134-136. 3. Justice according to law, i.e. according to authoritative precepts applied by an authoritative technique.

Law means uniformity of judicial and magisterial action — generality, equality, and certainty in the administration of justice.

Advantages of law:

- (a) Law makes it possible to predict the course which the administration of justice will take.
- (b) Law secures against errors of individual judgment.
- (c) Law secures against improper motives on the part of those who administer justice.
- (d) Law provides the magistrate with standards in which the settled ethical ideas of the community are formulated.
- (e) Law gives the magistrate the benefit of all the experience of his predecessors.
- (f) Law prevents sacrifice of ultimate interests, social and individual, to the more obvious and pressing but less weighty immediate interests.

Disadvantages of law:

- (a) Rules are made for cases in gross and men in the mass and operate impersonally and more or less arbitrarily.
- (b) Science and system carry with them a tendency to make law an end rather than a means.
- (c) Law begets more law, and a developed system tends to attempt rules where rules are not practicable and to invade the legitimate domain of justice without law.
- (d) As law formulates settled ethical ideas, it cannot, in periods of transition, accord with the more advanced conceptions of the present; there is always an element, greater or less, that does not wholly correspond to present needs or to present conceptions of justice.

Salmond, First Principles of Jurisprudence, 90-92; Korkunov, General Theory of Law (transl. by Hastings) 326-327, 394-395; Pound, Causes of Popular Dissatisfaction with the Administration of Justice, XXIX Rep. Am. Bar Assn. 395, 397-402.

4. Legislative justice.

Sidgwick, Elements of Politics, 355-356, 360, 482-484.

Examples of legislative justice:

- (a) Greek trials before popular assemblies.
See II Vinogradoff, Historical Jurisprudence, 150-152.
- (b) Roman capital trials before the people and appeals to the people in criminal causes.
- (c) Germanic administration of justice by assemblies of free men.
- (d) Judicial power of the English parliament.
 - (1) Relief against duress and fraud.
See I Rogers, Protests of the Lords, 17, 19, 22, 30, 39.
 - (2) Error and appeal in the House of Lords.
See Holdsworth, The House of Lords, 1689-1783, 45 L. Q. Rev. 307, 326-330.
 - (3) Impeachments.
 - (4) Parliamentary declaration of treason.
Reznick, Parliamentary Declaration of Treason, 46 L. Q. Rev. 80.
 - (5) Bills of attainder and of pains and penalties.
 - (6) Divorce bills.
- (e) Jurisdiction of the French senate to "pass judgment upon the President of the Republic and the ministers and to take cognizance of attacks upon the security of the state." Cf. Untersuchungsausschüsse of the German Reichstag. See Scheffer, Die deutsche Justiz (1928) 286-295.
- (f) Judicial powers of American colonial legislatures and state legislatures immediately after the Revolution. Pound, Organization of Courts (1940) 22-29, 33-34, 64-65, 110-111.
 - (1) Bills of attainder.
 - (2) Bills of pains and penalties.
See Tanner, Tudor Constitutional Documents, 423-432.
 - (3) Legislative appellate jurisdiction.
 - (4) Legislative granting of new trials.

 - (5) Legislative equitable relief in Pennsylvania.
Loyd, Early Courts of Pennsylvania, 191-192; Cowan, Legislative Equity in Pennsylvania, 4 Univ. of Pittsburgh L. Rev. 1.
 - (6) Legislative jurisdiction in divorce.
 - (7) Legislative jurisdiction in insolvency.
- (g) Legislative justice in America today.
 - (1) Impeachment.
See Potts, Impeachment as a Remedy, 12 St. Louis L. Rev. 15, 31-38.
 - (2) Claims against the state.

Defects of legislative justice:

- (a) In practice legislative justice has proved unequal, uncertain, and capricious.
II Wooddesson, Lectures, lect. 41; I Tucker's Blackstone, 292-294; Thompson, Anti-Loyalist Legislation During the American Revolution, 3 Ill. L. Rev. 81, 147, 171; Eaton, The Development of the Judicial System in Rhode Island, 14 Yale L. J. 148, 153.

(b) The influence of personal solicitation, lobbying, and even corruption has been very marked.

Eaton, The Development of the Judicial System in Rhode Island, 14 Yale L. J. 148, 153; Pierce v. State, 13 N. H. 536, 557; III Debates of Pennsylvania Constitutional Convention (1873) 5-20.

(c) Legislative justice has always proved highly susceptible to the influence of passion and prejudice.

Thompson, Anti-Loyalist Legislation During the American Revolution, 3 Ill. L. Rev. 147, 157, 162; I Tucker's Blackstone, 293; Trial of Judge Addison, 7-15; Loyd, Early Courts of Pennsylvania, 143, 146; I Trial of Andrew Johnson (official ed.) 674, 693, 696-697, 698-700; I Stephen, History of the Criminal Law, 160; Lovat-Fraser, The Impeachment of Lord Melville, 24 Juridical Rev. 235; Reznek, The Parliamentary Declaration of Treason, 46 L. Q. Rev. 80-103; Park, Biographical Sketch of Judge Emory Spear, 36 Rep. Georgia Bar Assn. 101, 114-115.

(d) Purely partisan or political motives have preponderated as grounds of decision.

See the last four citations next above; I Atlay, Victorian Chancellors, 144-145; VIII Campbell, Lives of the Lord Chancellors, 144-146; Browne, The New York Court of Appeals, 2 Green Bag, 277-278.

(e) Legislators who have not heard all the evidence have habitually participated in argument and decision; and those who have not heard all the arguments have habitually taken part in the decision.

See the record of attendance and voting in the Impeachment of Cox (Minnesota, 1881). Cf. Owens v. Battenfield, 33 Fed. (2d) 753, 757-758.

The balance between law and administration.

The advantages claimed for executive justice are those claimed for justice without law.

(a) Directness.

(b) Expedition.

- (c) Conformity to popular will for the time being.
- (d) Freedom from the bonds of purely traditional rules.
- (e) Freedom from technical rules of evidence and power to act upon the everyday instincts of ordinary men.

Bonnard's reasons why France does not commit review of administrative action to the civil courts:

- (a) A certain spirit of judicial hostility to administrative action.
- (b) Administrative disputes frequently have a technical character, calling for special judges.
- (c) Administrative experiments give rise to a great mass of disputes which would prove too much for the civil courts.
- (d) Administrative courts can be organized so as to offer the same guarantees of independence and impartiality as the ordinary courts.
- (e) The judges in the civil courts are accustomed to applying written texts and codified law, and hence are not adapted to dealing with an uncoded administrative law.

Defects of administrative justice in the common-law world:

- (a) A tendency to decide without a hearing or without hearing one of the parties.

In re Evans, 52 New South Wales Weekly Notes, 1; Roche, L. J. in Errington v. Minister of Health [1935] 1 K. B. 249, 280-281; Rex v. Housing Appeal Tribunal [1920] 3 K. Federal Communications Commission*, 96 Fed. (2d) 564, 566 (1938). See cases from state courts cited in Pound, Administrative Law (1942) 68.

- (b) A tendency to decide on the basis of matters not before the tribunal or on secret reports or evidence not produced.

Cardozo, J. in United States v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 294 U. S. 499, 510; IX Wigmore, Evidence (3 ed.) § 2569; Morgan v. United States, 304 U. S. 1, 14-15, 17, 19-20; and cases cited in Pound, Administrative Law (1942) 69-72.

- (c) A tendency to make decisions on the basis of preformed opinions and prejudices.

Scott, L. J. in Cooper v. Wilson [1937] 2 K. B. 309, 345.

(d) A tendency to consider the administrative determining function one of acting rather than of deciding; to apply to the determining function the methods of the directing function.

See Vanderbilt, The Bar and the Public, 23 A. B. A. J. 871, 873.

(e) A tendency to disregard jurisdictional limits and seek to extend the sphere of administrative action, and to set up and give effect to policies beyond or even at variance with the statutes or the general law governing the action of the administrative agency.

See Doran v. Eisenberg, 30 Fed. (2d) 503; Charles D. Kaier Co. v. Doran, 42 Fed. (2d) 923, 924; Motsinger v. Perryman, 218 N. C. 15, 21 (1940); In re Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co.'s Protest, 44 N. M. 608, 613 (1940); Puhl v. Pennsylvania Public Utilities Commission, 139 Pa. Super. Ct. 152, 158 (1939).

(f) A tendency to make determinations without a basis in evidence of rational probative force.

Taylor v. Cornett Lewis Coal Co., 281 Ky. 366, 368 (1940); and cases discussed in Pound, Administrative Law (1942) 68-73.

(g) A tendency to do "what will get by"; to yield to political or other pressure at the expense of the law.

(h) A tendency to arbitrary rule making for administrative convenience at the expense of important interests.

See Doran v. Eisenberg, 30 Fed. (2d) 503, 504.

(i) A tendency at the other extreme to fall into a perfunctory routine.

See Criminal Justice in Cleveland, 616, 623, 631, 647; Young, Social Treatment in Probation and Delinquency, 468.

(j) A tendency to exercise the deciding function by deputies and to rubber stamp review of the acts of subordinates by the subordinates themselves.

(k) A tendency to mix up rule making, investigation, prosecution, the advocate's function, the judge's function, and the function of enforcing the judgment, so as to make a proceeding one to give effect to a complaint.

See Vanderbilt, The Bar and the Public, 23 A. B. A. J. 871, 873.

Forms and rules, by compelling deliberation, guard against suggestion and impulse and insure the application of reason to the cause.

See Stephens, Administrative Tribunals and the Rules of Evidence, chap. 7; Pittman, The Doctrine of Precedents and the Interstate Commerce Commission, 5 George Washington L. Rev. 543, 578-579. As to the results of want of rules of evidence in criminal trials before laymen, see Chandler, American Criminal Trials, 137-138.

In time administrative tribunals have turned into ordinary courts.

6. Judicial justice.

and the Courts, 18 Am. J. Sociol. 331; 2 Beard, Rise of the American Constitution, 587.

Setting off of the judicial function has been a gradual process.
Objections urged against judicial justice:

(a) That it is too rigid and does not allow sufficient play to the non-legal conscience in the ascertaining or in the applying of the law.

(b) That the premises employed in judicial justice are too narrow and pedantic and the fundamental principles too fixed, so that judicial justice is too slow in responding to the environment in which it must operate.

See Wyatt v. Kreglinger & Fernau [1933] 1 K. B. 793.

(c) That it is characterized by a tendency to reduce to rule, along with those things which demand rule, those with respect to which detailed rules are not practicable.

See Lord Shaw in Local Government Board v. Arlidge [1915] A. C. 120, 137-138; Crownhart, Labor Law Enforcement through Administrative Orders, 4 American Labor Legislation Rev. 13; Commons and Morehouse, Legal and Economic Job Analysis, 37 Yale L. J. 139; Rosenberry, Power of the Courts to Set Aside Administrative Rules and Orders, 24 A. B. A. J. 279; Vanderbilt, The Place of the Administrative Tribunal in our Legal System, id. 267.

These objections amount to this: That judicial justice realizes justice according to law most completely and so brings out its defects as well as its excellencies.

Advantages of judicial justice:

(a) It combines the possibilities of certainty and of flexibility better than any other form of administering justice.

(b) There are checks upon the judge which do not obtain or are ineffective in case of legislative and executive officers. Pound, Administrative Law (1942) 60-68.

(c) Because of training in and habit of seeking and applying principles when called on to act and because their decisions are subject to expert criticism, judges will stand for the law against excitement and clamor.

Adams, Some Remarks on Carnelutti's System of Jurisprudence (1939) 50 Ethics, 84-95.

An interest is a demand or desire which human beings either individually or in groups seek to satisfy, of which, therefore, the ordering of human relations in civilized society must take account.

The law does not create interests. It classifies them and recognizes a larger or smaller number; it defines the extent to which it will give effect to those which it recognizes, in view of (a) other interests, (b) the possibilities of effectively securing them through law; it devises means for securing them when recognized and within the determined limits.

Hence in determining the scope and subject matter of a legal system we have (1) to take an inventory of the interests which press for recognition and generalize and classify them; (2) to determine the interests which the law should recognize and seek to secure; (3) to determine the principles upon which such interests should be defined and limited for the purpose of securing them; (4) to consider the means by which the law may secure them when recognized and delimited; and (5) to take account of the limitations upon effective legal action which may preclude complete recognition or complete securing of interests which otherwise we should seek to secure.

D. INVENTORY AND CLASSIFICATION OF INTERESTS

The interests which the legal order secures may be (1) demands or desires involved in or regarded from the standpoint of the individual life immediately as such (individual interests), (2) demands or desires involved in or looked at from the standpoint of life in a politically organized society, asserted in title of political life (public interests); or (3) those wider demands or desires involved in or looked at from the standpoint of social life in civilized society and asserted in title of social life (social interests).

SCHEMES OF INTERESTS TO BE SECURED BY LAW

Hippodamus of Miletus (B.C. c. 408).

He [Hippodamus] also divided his laws into three classes and no more, for he maintained that there are three subjects of law-suits — insult, injury, and homicide. — Aristotle, Politics, ii, 8 (I Jowett's transl. 47).

Justinian, Institutes (A.D. 533).

The precepts of right and law are these: to live honorably, not to injure another, to give to each his own. — Inst. i, 1, § 3.

See I Savigny, System des heutigen römischen Rechts, § 59; Affolter, Das römische Institutionen-System, 421-430.

Bacon (1629).

The use of the law consisteth principally in these three things:
1. To secure men's persons from death and violence. 2. To dispose of the property of their goods and lands. 3. For preservation of their good names from shame and infamy. — Use of the Law, 1. [As to the authorship of this book and its date, see VII Spedding, Bacon's Works, 453-457.]

Bentham (1802).

In the distribution of rights and obligations the legislator . . . should have for his end the happiness of society. Investigating more distinctly in what that happiness consists, we shall find four subordinate ends:

Subsistence, abundance, equality,
security.

The more perfect enjoyment is in all these respects, the greater is the sum of social happiness: and especially of that happiness which depends upon the laws.

We may hence conclude that all the functions of law may be referred to these four heads: To provide subsistence; to produce abundance; to favor equality; to maintain security. — Theory of Legislation, Principles of the Civil Code (Hildreth's transl.) chap. 2.

1. The so-called ancient codes, more or less authoritative publications of traditional law, are generically distinct. They come before a period of legal development. Codes in the modern sense come after a full legal development and simplify the form of the law.

2. Codification in Roman law.

The compilations of Gregorius and Hermogenianus (fourth century A.D.)

The Theodosian Code (A.D. 429-438. Took effect 439).

The Codification of Justinian (A.D. 528-534).

The Code (529, revised and re-enacted 534).

The Digest (533).

The Institutes (533).

The Novels.

3. Modern Codes.

The Constitutio Criminalis Carolina (1532).

Partial codification under Louis XIV in France.

The project of Colbert (1667-1670).

The Prussian Code.

The draft code of Frederick the Great (1749).

The Allgemeines Landrecht (1780-1794).

The French Civil Code (1800-1804).

Adopted in Belgium, Egypt, and Polish Russia.

Taken as the model in:

Argentina (1869, rev. 1883)

Bolivia (1830, rev. 1903)

Chili (1855)

Colombia (1857, rev. 1872)

Costa Rica (1886)

Ecuador (1887)

Guatemala (1877, rev. 1882)

Haiti (1826)

Holland (1838)

Honduras (1880)

Italy (1865)

Louisiana (1808, rev. 1824, 1870)

Mexico (1870, rev. 1884)

Montenegro (1873-1886)

Peru (1851)

Portugal (1867)

Quebec (1866)

Rumania (1864)

Salvador (1880)

San Domingo (1884)

Spain (1889)

Uruguay (1869)

Venezuela (1873).

The Austrian Civil Code (1713-1811).

Projected 1713, draft 1767, partial new draft 1787, put in force 1811.

Taken as model in

Servia (1844, rev. 1879).

The German Civil Code (1874-1900).

First commission appointed 1874, first draft published 1887, new commission 1890, new draft 1896, took effect 1900.

Taken as model in Japan (1896, took effect 1900).

The Swiss Federal Codes.

The Civil Code (1907, took effect 1912).

The Code of Obligations (1901).

See the Historical Introduction in Shick, Translation of the Swiss Civil Code.

The Civil Code of Brazil (1917).

As to the history of this code, see Lacerda, Codigo Civil Brasileiro, pp iv-lxiv.

Codification in Poland.

See Rappaport, The Work of the Commission for Codification in Poland, 1 Rev. of Polish Law and Economics, 16 (1928).

Codification in Soviet Russia.

Les codes de la Russie soviétique, I Code de la famille (transl. by Patoillet) Code civile (transl. by Patoillet et Dufour, 1925).

Codification in China.

The Chinese Civil Code (1930). See Chu, Commentaries on the Chinese Civil Code.

Two classes of countries have adopted codes:

(a) Countries with well-developed legal systems which had exhausted the possibilities of juristic development through the traditional element and required a new basis for a new juristic development.

(b) Countries which had their whole legal development before them, which required an immediate basis for development.

Conditions which have led to codification:

(a) The possibilities of juristic development on the basis of the traditional element were exhausted for the time being, or a new basis was required for a country with no juristic past.

(b) The law was unwieldy, full of archaisms and uncertain.

(c) The growing-point had shifted to legislation and an efficient organ of legislation had developed.

(d) Usually, there was a need for one law in a political community, whose several subdivisions had developed divergent local laws.

4. Codification in Anglo-American law.

In England:

The project under Henry VIII

Bacon's project (1614)

Lord Westbury's plan (1860-1863)

Gradual codification in England:

The Bills of Exchange Act (1882)

The Partnership Act (1890)

The Sale of Goods Act (1894)

The Marine Insurance Act (1906)

"Private codification."

The Anglo-Indian Codes (1837-1882).

In Australia:

The project in Victoria (1878-1882)

See Hearn, Theory of Legal Duties and Rights, 378-382, and appendix, 385.

In the United States:

The New York Codes (1847-1887)

The Code of Civil Procedure (1848)

Codes based on this were adopted in 30 jurisdictions

The draft Civil Code (1862). See Pomeroy, The True Method of Interpreting the Civil Code, 3 West Coast Reporter, 585, 691, 717; 4 id. 1, 49, 109, 145

The Penal Code (1864, enacted 1887)

The draft Political Code (1865)

The Code of Criminal Procedure (1865)

Throop's Code of Civil Procedure (1876-1880)

All of Field's drafts were adopted in California, North and South Dakota, and Montana, and the California Civil Code was adopted for the Canal Zone

The Massachusetts commission (1835)

The Civil Code of Georgia (1860)

The Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws

The Negotiable Instruments Law

The Warehouse Receipts Act

The Sales Act

The Stock Transfer Act

The Bills of Lading Act

The Partnership Act

See Williston, The Uniform Partnership Act, With Some Remarks on Other Uniform Commercial Laws, 63 U. Pa. L. Rev. 196; Vold, Some Reasons Why the Code States Should Adopt the Uniform Sales Act, 5 California L. Rev. 400, 471; Terry, Uniform State Laws in the United States.

"Private Codification"

5. Objections to codification:

(a) Defects of codes in the past.

(1) The codifiers too often had but superficial knowledge of much of the law they attempted to codify.

(2) Most codes in the past have been drawn too hurriedly.

(b) Savigny's objections:

(1) That the growth of the Law is likely to be impeded or diverted into unnatural directions.

Schiffer, Die deutsche Justiz (1927) 80-92.

(2) That a code made by one generation is likely to project directly or indirectly the intellectual and moral notions of the time into times when such notions have become anachronisms.

(c) Austin's objections to the French code:

(1) That it makes no adequate provision for the incorporation of judicial interpretation from time to time.

(2) That it was not complete and was intended to be eked out by pre-existing law.

6. Purposes of codification:

The eighteenth-century idea.

Bentham's idea.

The idea of a code as the basis of a juristic new start.

What a code should attempt.

7. Defects of form in American law:

(a) Want of certainty.

(b) Waste of labor entailed by unwieldy form of the law.

(c) Lack of means of knowledge on the part of those who seek to amend the law.

(d) Irrationality, due to partial survival of obsolete rules.

(e) Confusion between two parallel lines of authoritative grounds of determination (case law and statute law) dealing with the same subjects.

8. The need of new premises in American law.

ANALYSIS OF GENERAL JURISTIC CONCEPTIONS

XXI. RIGHTS

1. Introductory Excursus — Juristic Conceptions.

(a) The place of juristic conceptions in historical development of law.

I Jhering, Geist des römischen Rechts, § 3.

(b) The use of conceptions.

I Jhering, Geist des römischen Rechts (5 ed.) 36-43, II, §§ 39-41; I Génv, Science et technique en droit privé positif, 145-164, III, 175-257, IV, 23-46; Hohfeld, Fundamental Legal Conceptions, 63-64; Green, Judge and Jury, chap. 9.

(c) Abuse of conceptions.

Pound, Mechanical Jurisprudence (1908) 8 Columbia L. Rev. 605, 610-621; Jhering, Scherz und Ernst in der Jurisprudenz, pt. 3; I Génv, Méthode d'interprétation (2 ed.) 124-204; Arnold, Criminal Attempts, 40 Yale L. J. 53, 79-80; Fuchs, Gesunder Menschenverstand, Neu-Wiener Begriffsnetz und französische "neue Schule" (1928) 4 Die Justiz, 129.

(d) "Necessary" conceptions and "general" conceptions.

2. Meanings of "a right."

Hohfeld, Fundamental Legal Conceptions, 6-12; Pound, Legal Rights, 26 Internat. Journ. of Ethics, 92; I Beale, Conflict of Laws, 62-70, 79-86.

3. History of the conception of "a right."

(a) Origins in Greek philosophy.

τὸ δίκαιον, τοῦ μὲν δίκαιον

τὸ καθήκον

Aristotle, Nicomachean Ethics, v, 2, 8-9, v, 4, 1-8, v, 7, 5-6; Demosthenes against Midias, 572, 14; Diogenes Laertius, vii, 108; Cicero, De Officiis, i, 3.

Justice as applied to a particular case. There is no clear idea of "a right," but rather of a legally established or legally recognized moral duty.

(b) Origins in Roman procedure.

The action for a physical thing.

The action for a person judicially or formally condemned to a payment.

Buckland, Text Book of Roman Law, 668; Gaius, iii, § 174. See Gaius, iv, § 21.

The claim asserted generally.

The claim asserted against a particular person.

Gaius, iv, §§ 1-5; Inst. iv, 6, 1.

(c) Ius in Roman law.

I Glück, Ausführliche Erläuterung der Pandekten, § 1.

(a) As what is right and just, in reason, in morals, or in ethical custom. Dig. i, 1, 1, pr. and § 1, i, 1, 10-11.

(b) As law—what is legally established or recognized as right and just. Inst. i, 2; Dig. i, 1, 6, i, 1, 11. In Gaius, the strict law, as distinguished from the praetorian law. Gaius, ii, §§ 146, 198, iii, § 75, iv, § 60.

(c) As a law or legal precept. Dig. xxii, 3, 5, 1, 17, 82, i, 3, 35, xii, 1, 1.

(d) As legal institution—rightful or customary institution legally recognized or established. Gaius, i, §§ 55, 112, 129, 158.

(e) As presence of a magistrate—where right and justice may be had. Dig. ii, 3.

(f) As political capacity. E.g. ius suffragii, ius honorum.

(g) As authority—legally backed customary or moral authority. E.g. ius imperandi, Dig. ix, 2, 37, pr.; ius patris, Mosaicarum et Romanarum Legum Collatio, iv, 7; persons alieno iuri subiecti, Inst. i, 8, pr.

(h) As power—a legally backed moral or customary power. E.g. ius donandi nundendi concedendi, Dig. i, 17, 163; ius testamenti faciendi, Dig. xxviii, 1, 6, pr.

(i) As privilege—rightful liberty legally recognized. Dig. i, 17, 55.

(j) As legal position—rightful position under a rule of law, legally conferred advantage. E.g. ius Latii, Gaius, i, § 95; ius trium liberorum, Gaius, i, §§ 145, 194, iii, § 44; Ulpian, Regulae, iii, 1, xix, 3; ius cognationis, Dig. i, 1, 12.

There is no clear differentiation and no clear conception of a right.

(d) Ius from the twelfth to the sixteenth century.

(1) The Glossators and Commentators.

Little advance on the Roman texts.

(3) The Humanists.

I Donellus, De iure civili, 3, 2-4 (1589).

Ius as "a right" distinctly set off as a different conception from ius as "right-and-law."

(e) "Right" in medieval law.

Rectum as equivalent to ius with most of its meanings, tending to become "that which is right as applied to my case."

See Du Cange, Glossarium ad scriptores mediae et infimae Latinitatis, sub voc. Rectum; Fleta, vi, c. 1, § 1. See also Co. Lit. 158b, 266a, 345a, b.

(k) Hohfeld's analysis — see infra 5 (b).

4. Theories of "a right."

(a) The natural-law conception — a right as a recognized and secured quality.

Ius has another signification [i.e. than "law"] derived from the former which refers to the person. In this sense jus (a right) is a moral quality by which a person is competent to have or to do a thing justly. — Grotius, De iure belli ac pacis, i, 1, 4 (1625).

That moral quality by which either we rightly command persons or hold things, or by force of which something is owed to us. — I Pufendorf, De iure naturae et gentium (1672) 1, 30.

The moral justification of one human being in controlling for his own benefit the volition of another. — Phillips, Jurisprudence (1863) 6-8, 27.

That quality in a person which makes it just or right for him either to possess certain things or to do certain actions. — I Rutherford, Institutes of Natural Law, 2, § 3.

(b) A right as a policy — the general security put in terms of "a right."

"The law punishes the larceny of property, not solely because of any rights of the proprietor, but also because of its own inherent legal rights as property." — Shaw, C. J. in Commonwealth v. Rourke, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 397, 399 (1852).

(c) Metaphysical — a right as deduced from the fundamental datum of free will.

A power over an object which, by reason of the right, is subjected to the will of the person entitled. — II Puchta, Cursus der Institutionen (9 ed.) § 207.

A moral power over others residing in one's self. — I Stahl, Philosophie des Rechts (5 ed.) 279.

See Kant, Rechtslehre (2 ed.) xlv-xlvii, 55-56 (Hastie's transl. 55-59, 61-62); Miller, The Data of Jurisprudence, 50-51, 131-132.

(d) Jural relations — a right as a relation.

If we consider the jural and legal order, which surrounds us and presses on us from every side, we see first of all the power belonging to the individual person; a sphere in which his will rules, and rules with our concurrence. We call this power a right of that person, meaning the same thing as authority. Many call it Recht in the subjective sense. . . . But a more precise consideration shows us . . . the need of a deeper foundation. We find this in the jural relation (Rechtsverhältniss). — I Savigny, System des heutigen römischen Rechts, § 4.

Each particular jural relation [is] . . . a relation between person and person, determined by a rule of law. But this determination by a rule of law consists herein: that a sphere is assigned to the individual will in which it may govern independent of the wills of others. — Id. § 52.

A relation between persons, concerning an object, created by a particular fact, determined by a principle or rule of law, for an end of human life. — I Ahrens, Cours de droit naturel, § 23.

A relation sanctioned and protected by the legal order. — Kohler, Einführung in die Rechtswissenschaft, § 6.

Rev.* 515, and Various Definitions of Jural Relation, 20 Columbia L. Rev. 394).

I Savigny, System des heutigen römischen Rechts, §§ 4. 52-53; Puntchart, Die fundamentalen Rechtsverhältnisse des römischen Privatrechts, §§ 7-8; Herkless, Jurisprudence, 84-88; Stammler, Theorie der Rechtswissenschaft (2 ed.) 124-126, 135-138; I Kohler, Lehrbuch des bürgerlichen Rechts, §§ 44-46.

Right consisteth in liberty to do or to forbear; whereas law determineth and bindeth to one of them: so that law and right differ as much as obligation and liberty. — Hobbes, Leviathan, chap. 14.

Right is liberty, namely, that liberty which the civil law leaves us. — Id. chap. 26.

A liberty to follow my own will in all things where that rule [i.e. a standing rule applicable to all and made by the legislative authority] prescribes not. — Locke, Two Treatises of Government, bk. ii, chap. 4.

By private civil right we can mean only the liberty every man possesses to preserve his existence, a liberty limited by the edicts of the sovereign power and preserved only by its authority. — Spinoza, Tractatus Theologico-Politicus, chap. 16.

A permission to exercise certain natural powers and upon certain conditions to obtain protection, restitution, or compensation by the aid of the public force. Just so far as the aid of the public force is given a man, he has a legal right. — Holmes, The Common Law, 214.

(f) A right as what is right put subjectively.

The legal order (Recht in the objective sense, objective right), on the basis of a concrete situation of fact, puts forth a command, requiring conduct of a certain sort, and puts this command at the free disposition of the one for whose benefit it was issued. It leaves it to him whether or not he will make use of the command and in particular whether or not he will put in action the means afforded by the legal order against those who disobey it. His will is determining for the carrying out of the command issued by the legal order. The legal order has made its command his command. What is right has become his right. . . .

A right is a power or authority of the will conferred by the legal order. — I Windscheid, Lehrbuch des Pandektenrechts, § 37.

(g) A right as a secured interest.

An interest protected by law. — III Jhering, Geist des römischen Rechts, § 60.

A moral or natural right is an interest recognized and protected by the rule of natural justice — an interest the violation of which would be a moral wrong, and respect for which is a moral duty. A legal right . . . is an interest recognized and protected by the rule of legal justice — an interest the violation of which would be a legal wrong to him whose interest it is, and respect for which is a legal duty. — Salmond, Jurisprudence, § 72.

There has been a controversy whether right is power or interest. The word suggests both; a power to exact a particular act or forbearance, service, or benefit, and a particular interest on account of which the power exists, from which it derives its value, with respect to which its form is determined, and which it serves to protect. But the right in itself is power. It is related to the interest as the fortification to the protected land. — Merkel, Juristische Encyclopädie (2 ed.) § 159, note.

Salmond, Jurisprudence, §§ 70-74.

Korkunov, General Theory of Law (transl. by Hastings) § 22; Gareis, Science of Law (transl. by Kocourek) 31-35.

(h) A right as a power or capacity.

The capacity or power of exacting from another or others acts or forbearances.

A party has a right when another or others are bound or obliged by the law to do or forbear towards or in regard of him. — I Austin, Jurisprudence, lect. 16.

A capacity in one man of controlling, with the assent and assistance of the state, the actions of others. — Holland, Jurisprudence, chap. 7.

(i) A right as a legally assertable claim.

Thon, Rechtsnorm und subjektives Recht, chap. 5; II Bierling, Kritik der juristischen Grundbegriffe, 49–73; Somló, Juristische Grundlehre, §§ 125–126, 131–135.

(j) The conception of social functions.

In what, then, does this notion of social function consist? It comes to this: The individual man has no rights, nor has the collectivity rights. To speak of the rights of the individual and of the rights of society, to say that we must reconcile the rights of the individual with those of the collectivity, is to speak of things which do not exist. But every individual has a certain function to perform in society, a certain task to carry out. He cannot be allowed not to perform this function, he cannot be allowed not to carry out this task, because a derangement or at least a prejudice to society would result from his refraining. Moreover, every act which he does, contrary to the function which devolves upon him, will be socially repressed. But conversely, everything which he does to accomplish the mission which is his because of the place he occupies in society will be socially protected and guaranteed. — Duguit, Les transformations générales du droit privé depuis le Code Napoléon, 24.

Duguit in Progress of Continental Law in the Nineteenth Century (11 Continental Legal History Series) 74–75; Duguit, Objective Law, 20 Columbia L. Rev. 817, 822–825 (as to this, see 41 Harv. L. Rev. 174, 195).

XXIX. PROPRIETARY RIGHTS: POSSESSION

Pollock, First Book of Jurisprudence (5 ed.) 171-206; Salmond, Jurisprudence, §§ 94-107; Holland, Jurisprudence, chap. 11, sub-div. V to "Ownership;" Markby, Elements of Law (6 ed.) §§ 347-399; Keeton, Elementary Principles of Jurisprudence, chap. 22; Pollock and Wright, Essay on Possession in the Common Law, introduction; Holmes, The Common Law, lect. 6; Shartel, Meanings of Possession, 16 *Minnesota L. The literature upon the nature and elements of possession is very extensive. The following are important or useful: Savigny, Recht des Besitzes (7 ed. by Rudorff); Bruns, Recht des Besitzes im Mittelalter und in der Gegenwart; Bekker, Recht des Besitzes bei den Römern; Jhering, Der Besitzwille; Kuntze, Zur Besitzlehre; Stintzing, Der Besitz; Kniep, Der Besitz; Rohde, Studien im Besitzrecht; Kress, Besitz und Recht; Vermond, Théorie générale de la possession; Saleilles, Éléments constitutifs de la possession; id. La possession des meubles; Duquesne, Distinction de la possession et de la détention en droit romain; Cornil, Possession dans le droit romain; Schwab, La théorie possessoire objective.

Stewart, The Differences Between Possession of Land and Chattels, 11 Canadian Bar Rev. 651.

JURAL POSTULATE I.

In civilized society men must be able to assume that others will commit no intentional aggressions upon them.

JURAL POSTULATE II.

In civilized society men must be able to assume that they may control for beneficial purposes what they have discovered and appropriated to their own use, what they have created by their own labor, and what they have acquired under the existing social and economic order.

As to these postulates and those proposed in the following lectures, see Hocking, Present Status of the Philosophy of Law and of Rights, §§ 41-48. They were first formulated in Pound, Introduction to American Law (1919) but have since been revised. See Pound, Social Control Through Law (1942) 112-118.

Nature of proprietary rights in general.

Relation of possession to ownership.

Importance of theory of possession,

in Roman law,
in the common law.

The conception of possession. Physical custody plus an intention to exclude all others.

Law or fact?

Different connections in which the conception has been used and their effect upon it:

In Roman law,
usucapion,
interdicts.

In the common law,
adverse possession,
use of possessory actions to vindicate ownership, larceny,
statutes.

The elements of possession.

Physical (corpus),

Mental (animus).

The physical element (naturalis possessio, detention, custody, Inhabung).

The mental element (juristic possession).

Difference between Roman and Germanic theories.

Animus domini.

Animus rem sibi habendi.

Animus possidendi.

Must it be a claim to control on one's own behalf, or for one's own purposes?

Servants and agents.

Mediate possession.

Representative — through agent or servant.

Through bailee — subject to demand, for fixed term or subject to condition.

Derivative possession.

Possession is a matter of law and of fact equally. . . . Possession is a matter of fact in so far as a non-juridical conception of pure fact (detention) lies at its foundation. . . . But possession is a matter of law in so far as legal rights are bound up with the bare existence of a conception of fact. — Savigny, Recht des Besitzes, § 5.

To possess a thing means to have it in one's actual control. This actual control may have a foundation in right and law or not; for the conception of possession this is indifferent. When we speak of possession, we look away from the law. But while possession is not [an institution of] right and law, it has legal consequences. — I Windscheid, Pandekten, § 148.

It is merely a state of things, a fact, a mere de facto relation to a thing into which a man has brought himself; which, however, inasmuch as it may under certain circumstances bring about a right to the thing, enjoys in itself the protection of the law. — Wächter, Pandekten, § 122 (transl. by Moyle, Institutes, 2 ed. 336).

Possession is no [institution of] right and law, but a matter of fact. But it may be (a) the consequence of rights . . . [e.g. ownership]; (b) the originating cause of rights . . . [e.g. usucapion, adverse possession]; (c) in certain cases the mere matter of fact of possession is protected against disturbance. — Gareis, Encyklopädie der Rechtswissenschaft, § 17.

What is the ground of this protection? Must we not say that if possession is no [institution of] right and law, its violation is no violation of right, and hence affords no ground for its protection? — Bruns in Holtzendorff, Encyklopädie der Rechtswissenschaft (5 ed.) 473.

There has been much learned discussion of the question whether possession is a fact or a right. No doubt it differs from ownership in requiring a de facto relation between a person and an object, and to that extent it is a fact. But there is no doubt also that it has legal consequences, and if that is so it seems to be little less than quibbling to say it is not a right as well. — Moyle, Institutes (2 ed.) 336.

Every right is a consequence attached by the law to one or more facts which the law defines, and wherever the law gives any one special rights not shared by the body of the people, it does so on the ground that certain special facts, not true of the rest of the world, are true of him. When a group of facts thus singled out by the law exists in the case of a given person, he is said to be entitled to the corresponding rights; meaning, thereby, that the law helps him to constrain his neighbors, or some of them, in a way in which it would not, if all the facts in question were not true of him. Hence, any word which denotes such a group of facts connotes the rights attached to it by way of legal consequences, and any word which denotes the rights attached to a group of facts connotes the group of facts in like manner.

The word "possession" denotes such a group of facts. Hence, when we say of a man that he has possession, we affirm directly that all the facts of a certain group are true of him, and we convey directly or by implication that the law will give him the advantage of the situation. Contract or property, or any other substantive notion of the law, may be analyzed in the same way, and should be treated in the same order. The only difference is that, while possession denotes the facts and connotes the consequence, property always, and contract with more uncertainty and oscillation, denote the consequence and connote the facts. — Holmes, The Common Law, 214-215.

XXXI. OBLIGATIONS

DUTIES OF PERFORMANCE AND OF RESTITUTION

JURAL POSTULATE III.

In civilized society men must be able to assume that those with whom they deal in the general intercourse of society will act in good faith, and hence

(a) will make good reasonable expectations which their promises or other conduct reasonably create;

(b) will carry out their undertakings according to the expectations which the moral sentiment of the community attaches thereto;

(c) will restore specifically or by equivalent what comes to them by mistake or unanticipated situation whereby they receive, at another's expense, what they could not reasonably have expected to receive under the actual circumstances.

OBLIGATION

The relation of one person to another whereby the one person is bound either to some performance or to forbear something.—Kohler, Einführung in die Rechtswissenschaft, § 28.

An obligatory right . . . is a right to require another person to do some act which is reducible to a money value. It is invariably directed against a determinate person. . . . Obligations are not designed to create any general control over all the acts of the debtor. A debtor can, in the last resort, rid himself of every obligation by sacrificing a corresponding portion of his property for the purpose of indemnifying his adversary. An obligation means a deduction, not from a man's liberty, but only from his property. — Sohm, Institutes of Roman Law (Ledlie's transl.) § 60.

CONTRACT

An expressed agreement of the wills of two or more persons for the purpose of producing an alteration in their spheres of rights. — Gareis, Encyklopädie der Rechtswissenschaft, § 23.

The declared agreement of two or more persons who desire to enter into an obligatory relation concerning an object of right. — II Ahrens, Cours de droit naturel, § 82.

The mutually expressed agreement of certain persons over a relation of law to be created between them. — II Stahl, Philosophie des Rechts (5 ed.) 412.

Those legal transactions which bring face to face several persons who have opposing interests are called agreements. They have special practical importance because, as men are compelled to live in community and are unable to do without mutual assistance, they must agree. Hence the transaction between persons with opposing interests — seller and buyer, hirer and letter, etc. — is likely to conform to the general interest and establish a wise mean.

These agreements may serve to create or to modify or to extinguish obligations.

Agreements which have for their end the creation of an obligation are known specially by the name of contracts. — I Demogue, Traité des obligations en général, no. 22.

A contract is a promise or set of promises to which the law attaches legal obligation. — I Williston, The Law of Contracts, § 1.

XXXII. WRONGS (DUTIES OF REPARATION)

COROLLARY OF JURAL POSTULATE I.

One who intentionally does anything which on its face is injurious to another must repair the resulting damage unless he can (1) justify his act under some social or public interest, or (2) assert a privilege because of a countervailing individual interest of his own which there is a social or a public interest in securing.

JURAL POSTULATE IV.

In civilized society men must be able to assume that others will act reasonably and prudently so as not, by want of due care under the circumstances, to impose upon them an unreasonable risk of injury.

JURAL POSTULATE V.

In civilized society men must be able to assume that others who maintain things or employ agencies, harmless in the sphere of their use but harmful in their normal action elsewhere, and having a natural tendency to cross the boundaries of their proper use, will restrain them or keep them within their proper bounds.

Hence one is liable in tort for

I. Intentional aggression upon the personality or substance of another (unless he can establish justification or privilege, according to the corollary of Postulate I).

II. Negligent interference with person or property — i.e. failure to come up to the legal standard of due care under the circumstances, while carrying on some course of conduct, whereby injury is caused to the person or substance of another.

III. Unintended non-negligent interference with the person or property of another through failure to restrain or prevent the escape of some thing or agency which one maintains or employs, such thing or agency having a tendency to get out of bounds and do harm.

Roman law	Delicts	Wrongful appropriation of property	{ furtum , rapina .
		Injury to corporeal property	{ damnum iniuria datum .
		Injuries to personality	{ to the physical person or to honor, iniuria .
		Injuries to personality whereby substance is impaired	{ dolus , metus .
	Quasi delicts	Liability of iudex who "makes a case his own."
		Liability de deiectis et effusis .
		Noxal liability.
		Liability under the aedilician edict.
Common law	Intentional aggression	a. Upon personality.
		(i) Assault and battery.
		(ii) Imprisonment.
		(iii) Infringement of privacy (in dispute).
		b. Upon personality and substance.
		(i) Infringement of rights in the domestic relations.
		(ii) Malicious prosecution.
		(iii) Defamation,
		(1) slander,
		(2) libel.
		c. Upon substance.
		(i) Trespass upon possession,
		(1) of land,
		(2) of chattels.
		(ii) Conversion of chattels.
		(iii) Intentional interference with advantageous relations.
		(iv) Deceit.
		Negligence.
		Failure to restrain or prevent escape of agencies or things likely to get out of hand and do harm.

As to the last category, see Smith Tort and Absolute Liability — Suggested Changes in Classification, 30 Harv. L. Rev. 241, 319, 409; Isaacs, Quasi Delict in Anglo-American Law, 31 Yale L. J. 571; Winfield, The Province of the Law of Torts, chap. 10.

In Roman law there was a contractual theory of delicts. A wrong gave rise to a claim on the part of the person injured to a penalty recoverable from the wrongdoer by the legal proceeding appropriate to collection of a debt. When the penalty came to be thought of as a penalty of reparation, the debt analogy had fixed the conception of an obligation ex delicto.

In the common law, on the other hand, for historical reasons, there is a tort theory of contracts. One sues for damages for non-performance of a promise instead of to exact performance.

Gjelsvik, Innledning i Rettsstudiet (2 ed. 1924).

Hastie, Outlines of Jurisprudence (1887) is made up of translations from Puchta, Cursus der Institutionen, pt. 1, Encyklopädie (1841), Friedländer, Juristische Encyklopädie oder System der Rechtswissenschaft (1847), Falck, Juristische Encyklopädie (5 ed. 1851), and Ahrens, Juristische Encyklopädie (1855).

Mention may be made also of the following: Ahrens, Juristische Encyklopädie (1855-1857 — there is an English translation of parts in Hastie, Outlines of Jurisprudence, 1887); Arndts, Juristische Encyklopädie und Methodologie (10 ed. by Grueber, 1901); Del Giudice, Enciclopedia giuridica (2 ed. 1896); Den Tex, Encyclopaedia Jurisprudentiae (1839); Eschbach, Introduction générale à l'étude du droit (3 ed. 1856); Falck, Juristische Encyklopädie (5 ed. by Jhering, 1851 — there is a translation of the 4th ed. 1841, and an English translation of parts in Hastie, Outlines of Jurisprudence, 1887); Fischer, Einführung in die Wissenschaft von Recht und Staat (1920); Goldschmidt, Encyklopädie der Rechtswissenschaft (1862); Guelfi, Enciclopedia giuridica (5 ed. 1907); Hedemann, Einführung in die Rechtswissenschaft (1919); Hugo, Lehrbuch der juristischen Encyklopädie (5 ed. 1817); Krückmann, Einführung in das Recht (1912); Perassi, Introduzione alle scienze giuridiche (1922); Ratkowski, Encyklopädie der Rechts und Staatswissenschaften (1890); Warnkönig, Juristische Encyklopädie (1853); Zevenberger, Formeelle Encyclopaedie der Rechtswetenschap (1925).

II. ANALYTICAL

1. In English.

Austin, Jurisprudence (5 ed. 1885, reprinted 1911).

The first six lectures were published in 1832 under the title of The Province of Jurisprudence Determined. The third edition (posthumous) 1863, or any subsequent edition, may be used. An abridgment by Campbell, styled Student's Edition (11 ed. 1909) is useful.

Holland, Elements of Jurisprudence (13 ed. 1924).

First ed. 1880. The ninth or any subsequent edition may be used.

Salmond, Jurisprudence (9 ed. by Parker, 1937).

First ed. 1902. The last edition is much altered by the editor. For many purposes the earlier editions, revised by the author, are preferable.

Markby, Elements of Law (6 ed. 1905).

First ed. 1871.

Brown, The Austinian Theory of Law (1906).

Gray, The Nature and Sources of the Law (1909, 2 ed. 1921).

The first edition is to be preferred.

Reference may be made also to Amos, Systematic View of the Science of Jurisprudence (1872); id. The Science of Law (2 ed. 1874); Heron, The Principles of Jurisprudence (1873); id. Introduction to the History of Jurisprudence (1860); Hearn, The Theory of Legal Duties and Rights (1884); Hibbert, Jurisprudence (1932); Lindley, Introduction to the Study of Jurisprudence (1854, 2 ed. 1890, a transl. of the general part of Thibaut, System des Pandektenrechts); Rattigan, The Science of Jurisprudence (3 ed. 1909); Dillon, The Laws and Jurisprudence of England and America (1894); Goadby, Introduction to the Study of Law (2 ed. 1914); Jenks, The New Jurisprudence (1933) (comparative analytical-historical, see review in 47 Harv. L. Rev. 890); Stone, Law and its Administration (1915); Harrison, Jurisprudence and the Conflict of Laws (1919, first published in 1878-1879); Wise, Outlines of Jurisprudence (revised by Winfield, 4 ed. by Oliver, 1925); Hexner, Studies in Legal Terminology (1941).

2. In German.

I Binding, Die Normen und ihre Uebertretung (2 ed. 1890).

Vol. I (1872, 2 ed. 1890), vol. II (1877, 2 ed. 1914-1916), vol. III (1918). The first 20 sections of vol. I are of general importance for the theory of the nature of law.

Bierling, Kritik der juristischen Grundbegriffe (1877-1883).

I Bierling, Juristische Prinzipienlehre (1894), vol. II (1898), vol. III (1905), vol. IV (1911).

III. HISTORICAL

Savigny, Vom Beruf unsrer Zeit für Gesetzgebung und Rechtswissenschaft (1814, 3 ed. 1840, reprinted 1892).

Translated as The Vocation of our Age for Legislation and Jurisprudence by Hayward (1831).

Savigny, Geschichte des römischen Rechts im Mittelalter (6 vols. 1815–1831, 2 ed. 7 vols. 1834–1851).

There is a French translation by Guenoux, Histoire du droit romain au moyen âge (1839). The foreword to this translation is useful in connection with Savigny's life. There is an English translation (from the first edition) of vol. I by Cathcart (1829).

Savigny, System des heutigen römischen Rechts (8 vols. 1840–1849).

This book has been a quarry for the systematic part of treatises on analytical jurisprudence. Sections 1–14 of vol. I are important for the historical theory of the nature of law. There is an English translation of vol. I by Holloway (1867). There is also a French translation by Guenoux, Traité de droit Romain (1840–1851).

Puchta, Cursus der Institutionen (10 ed. by Krüger, 1893, bk. I, Encyclopädie).

First ed. 1841.

Maine, Ancient Law. New edition with introduction and notes by Sir Frederick Pollock (1906).

This book, first published in 1861, has gone through many editions in England and America. Pollock's edition is recommended.

Maine, Early History of Institutions (1874).

—, Early Law and Custom (1883).

—, Village Communities in the East and West (1871).

These works of Sir Henry Maine are at the foundation of all study of historical jurisprudence.

Bryce, Studies in History and Jurisprudence (1901).

Clark, Practical Jurisprudence (1883).

—, Roman Private Law: Jurisprudence (1914).

Carter, Law: Its Origin, Growth, and Function (1907).

Wigmore, Problems of Law (1920).

Lect. I, Problems of the Law's Evolution. Neo-historical, positivist-comparative.

I Vinogradoff, Historical Jurisprudence (1920).

Neo-historical, pluralist-ideological.

II Vinogradoff, Collected Papers: Jurisprudence (1928).

Reference may be made also to Pulszky, Theory of Law and Civil Society (1888); Lightwood, The Nature of Positive Law (1883); Adams, Economics and Jurisprudence (1897). Hastie, Outlines of Jurisprudence (1887) contains a translation of Puchta's Encyklopädie (Cursus der Institutionen), I, §§ 1-61.

See also Bergbohm, Jurisprudenz und Rechtsphilosophie (1892); Beseler, Volksrecht und Juristenrecht (1843); Cogliolo, Saggi sopra l'evoluzione del diritto privato (1885); Löning, Ueber Wurzel und Wesen des Rechts (1907); Wieland, Die historische und die kritische Methode in der Rechtswissenschaft (1910).

IV. PHILOSOPHICAL

A convenient account of the history of philosophy of law and of the different philosophical schools may be found in Berolzheimer, The World's Legal Philosophies (transl. by Jastrow, 1913).

For statements of philosophical views as to law and the science of law from different recent standpoints, see My Philosophy of Law: Credos of Sixteen American Legal Scholars (1941).

1. The forerunners of modern legal science.

(Note: Only the books of prime importance are given here.

For the rest, see ante.)

(a) Scholastic Theological Jurisprudence.

Thomas Aquinas, Summa Theologica (ed. Migne, 1877).

Rickaby, Aquinas Ethicus (1896) is a convenient translation of the portions relating to law.

(b) The Law of Nature.

Grotius, De Iure Belli ac Pacis (1625).

Whewell's edition with an abridged translation (1853) is convenient.

(c) The Forerunners of the Analytical School.

Bodin, Les six livres de la république (1576).

Hobbes, Leviathan (1651).

Spinoza, Ethica (1674).

—, Tractatus Theologico-Politicus (1670).

Elwes' translation of Spinoza in Bohn's Libraries must be used with caution. There is a translation of the Ethica by Boyle (1910).

(d) The Forerunner of Sociological Jurisprudence.

Montesquieu, L'Esprit des Lois (1748).

Nugent's translation, revised by Prichard, in Bohn's Libraries, may be used conveniently.

(e) The English Utilitarians.

Bentham, Fragment on Government (1776, new ed. with introduction by Montague (1891, reprinted 1931).

—, A Comment on the Commentaries, first printed from the author's manuscript, with introduction and notes by Everett (1928).

—, Principles of Morals and Legislation (1780).

A convenient reprint published by the Clarendon Press (1876) may be recommended.

Bentham, Theory of Legislation (transl. by Hildreth, 1864, 5 ed. 1887; new ed. with introduction and notes by Ogden, 1931).

Originally published in French, 1820.

For a bibliography of Bentham's writings and of appreciations and critiques of Bentham, see Pound, Outlines of a Course on Legislation (1934) 55-56.

2. Nineteenth-century philosophical (metaphysical).

Lorimer, Institutes of Law (1872, 2 ed. 1880).

Miller, Lectures on the Philosophy of Law (1884).

—, The Data of Jurisprudence (1903).

Herkless, Lectures on Jurisprudence (1901).

Green, Principles of Political Obligation (1911).

Reprinted from the Works of Thomas Hill Green, II, 335-553. These lectures were delivered in 1879-1880.

Reference may be made also to Phillipps, Jurisprudence (1863); Hutchison Stirling, Lectures on the Philosophy of Law (1873) — a mere outline of Hegel's philosophy; Watts, An Outline of Legal Philosophy (1893); Smith, Elements of Right and of the Law (2 ed. 1887); id. The Law of Private Right (1893); Liroy, Philosophy of Right (transl. by Hastie, 1891); Miraglia, Comparative Legal Philosophy (transl. by Lisle, 1912).

Kant, Metaphysische Anfangsgründe der Rechtslehre (2 ed. 1798).

Translated complete, anonymously, London, 1794; also in part by Hastie (1887) as Kant's Philosophy of Law.

Fichte, Grundlage des Naturrechts (1796, new ed. by Medicus, 1908).

Translated by Kroeger (1889) as Fichte's Science of Rights.

Hegel, Grundlinien der Philosophie des Rechts (1821; ed. by Gans, 1840; new ed. by Lasson, 1911, 2 ed. 1921).

Translated by Dyde (1896) as Hegel's Philosophy of Right.

The translation must be used with caution. A useful introduction for students is Reyburn, The Ethical Theory of Hegel, A Study of the Philosophy of Right (1921). See also Binder, Busse und Larenz, Einführung in Hegel's Rechtsphilosophie (1931).

Krause, Abriss des Systemes der Philosophie des Rechtes (1825).

Ahrens, Cours de droit naturel (1837, 8 ed. 1892).

This book went through twenty-four editions in seven languages. The German 6th edition (Naturrecht, 1870-1871) contains important matter not in the French editions.

Lasson, Lehrbuch der Rechtsphilosophie (1882).

Boistel, Cours de philosophie du droit (1870, new ed. 1899).

Mention may also be made of the following: Abate Longo, Principii di filosofia del diritto (1881); Acolas, L'idée du droit (1889); id. Introduction à l'étude du droit (1885); Affolter, Natargesetze und Rechtsgesetze (1904); Anzilotti, La scuola del diritto naturale nella filosofia giuridica contemporanea

Roguin, Traité de droit civil comparé: Successions (5 vols. 1908-1912) is the best example of a comparative method applied to a large field of law and carried out with respect to Roman law, the modern codes, and English Law. In the studies publishing under the auspices of Professor Lambert, proceeding from the Institut de droit comparé of the University of Lyon (Bibliothèque de l'Institut de droit comparé de Lyon) particular questions have been treated by comparison of French law and Anglo-American law.

XI. COLLECTIONS OF MATERIALS FOR STUDENTS

Keener, Selections on the Elements of Jurisprudence (1896).

Chiefly analytical.

Hall, Readings in Jurisprudence (1938).

XII. MATERIALS FOR ANALYTICAL JURISPRUDENCE

The materials for analytical jurisprudence are drawn from the two developed systems of law:

A. The Roman or Civil law, beginning as the law of the city of Rome, became the law of the Roman empire and thus of the ancient world, and eventually, by absorption or reception from the twelfth to the eighteenth century, the law of modern Continental Europe. It is now the foundation or a principal ingredient of the law in Continental Europe (including Turkey), Scotland, Egypt, Central and South America, Quebec and Louisiana, and all French, Dutch, Spanish, or Portuguese colonies or countries settled by those peoples.

1. Roman law.

The authoritative form of the Roman law for the modern world is the Corpus Iuris Civilis, or compilation of Roman law by the Emperor Justinian.

Corpus Iuris Civilis (ed. by Mommsen, Krueger, and Schoell, vol. 1, Institutes by Krueger, Digest by Mommsen, revised by Krueger, 14 ed. 1922, vol. 2, Code by Krueger, 6 ed. 1895, vol. 3, Novels by Schoell, 1895).

The sources prior to Justinian may be found in convenient form in: Girard, Textes du droit Romain (5 ed. 1923).

This is the best edition of the pre-Justinian sources for students.

Bruns, Fontes iuris romani antiqui (7 ed. by Gradenwitz 1912).

Covers the sources down to Justinian except the jurists.

Krueger, Mommsen, Studemund, Collectio librorum iuris antejustiniani (3 vols. 1878-1905).

A collection of the juristic remains before Justinian and of the remains of the compilations of legislation before the Theodosian Code.

Riccobono, Baviera et Ferrini, Fontes iuris romani antejustiniani (1918).

Covers the same ground as Girard's Textes.

There are good English translations of the Digest of Justinian (in part), the Institutes of Justinian, and the Institutes or Commentaries of Gaius: Monro, The Digest of Justinian (2 vols. 1904-1909).

This translation extends to book XV, title 4. Monro has published separate translations of other parts as follows: Book XVII, title 1, on mandate, XVII, title 2, on partnership, XIX, title 2, on letting and hiring, XLI, titles 1 and 2, on acquiring property and on acquiring and losing possession, XLVII, title 2, on theft (conversion of property).

Other translations of parts are: Book IX, title 2, on the Aquilian law, and XXIV, title 1, on gifts between husband and wife, by Thayer; XLI, titles 1 and 2 by de Zulueta (recommended in preference to Monro); XLVI, titles 1 and 2, on sureties and givers of mandates and on novations and delegations, by Robinson; XLVII, title 2, on theft, by Jolowicz.

Moyle, English translation of the Institutes of Justinian (5 ed. 1913).

Abdy and Walker, The Institutes of Justinian (transl. with notes, 1876).

Poste, Gai institutionum iuris civilis commentarii quatuor, or Elements of Roman Law by Gaius, with a translation and commentary (4 ed. by Whittuck 1904).

Muirhead, Institutes of Gaius and the Rules of Ulpian (with transl. and notes, 3 ed. 1904).

Abdy and Walker, The Commentaries of Gaius (transl. with notes new ed. 1880).

All editions and translations of Gaius before 1933 require to be supplemented by de Zulueta, Supplements to the Institutes of Gaius (1935).

Mention may be made also of Scott, The Civil Law (transl. of the remains of the XII Tables, Gaius, the Rules of Ulpian, the Opinions of Paul, the Institutes, Digest, Code, and Novels of Justinian, and the Constitutions of Leo, 17 vols. 1932). This work must be used with caution since the best texts were not used and at some points the translations are not reliable.

The following institutional books may be used:

Buckland, Manual of Roman Private Law (1925).

Sohm, Institutes of Roman Law (transl. by Ledlie 3 ed. 1905).

This is a translation of the 12 ed. 1905 of Sohm, Institutionen des römischen Rechts. The latter is now in its 17 ed. by Mitteis and Wenger, 1923.

Girard, Manuel élémentaire du droit romain (8 ed. by Senn 1929).

The best book for the student on all questions of the history of Roman legal precepts and doctrines.

Czyhlarz, Lehrbuch der Institutionen des römischen Rechts (18 ed. 1924).

A very useful book as an introduction to analytical jurisprudence by way of Roman law.

The most satisfactory treatise and work of reference for English-speaking students is Buckland, A Text-Book of Roman Law (1921, 2 ed. 1932).

2. The civil law.

For the modern Roman law (i.e. the Roman law of Justinian as systematized and interpreted for the legal purposes of western Europe from the twelfth to the nineteenth century) the best works of reference are:

Windscheid, Lehrbuch des Pandektenrechts (3 vols. 9 ed. by Kipp, 1906).

First ed. 1862-65. This book is of the first importance for the student of jurisprudence. It is the culmination of the analytical-historical systematic method of the nineteenth century.

Dernburg, System des römischen Rechts (2 vols. 8 ed. of Dernburg, Pandekten, 1911-1912).

Van Wetter, Pandectes (5 vols. 1909-1911).

Savigny, System des heutigen römischen Rechts (8 vols. 1840-1849).

Of the first importance. It has been a quarry for the systematic part of analytical jurisprudence.

Glück, Ausführliche Erläuterung der Pandekten (63 vols. 1790-1896, vols. 1-7 in 2 ed. 1797-1807 reprinted 1867).

Pothier, Oeuvres (ed. by Bugnet, 3 ed. 10 vol. and index 1890).

3. Roman-Dutch law.

Lee, Introduction to Roman-Dutch Law (2 ed. 1925, 3 ed. 1931).

Grotius, Jurisprudence of Holland (transl. by Lee, 1926).

Van der Linden, Institutes of the Laws of Holland (transl. by Juta, 5 ed. 1906).

Nathan, The Common Law of South Africa (4 vols. 1904-1907, vols. 1-2, 2 ed. 1913).

Maasdorp, Institutes of Cape Law (4 vols., vol. 1, 6 ed. 1938, vol. 2, 6 ed. 1936, vol. 3, 4 ed. 1932, vol. 4, 4 ed. 1932).

Pereira, The Laws of Ceylon (2 ed. 1913).

4. Scots law.

Bell, Principles of the Law of Scotland (10 ed. 1899).

Erskine, Principles of the Law of Scotland (21 ed. by Rankine 1911).

B. The common law, Germanic in origin, was developed by the English courts from the thirteenth to the nineteenth century, and has spread over the world with the English people. It now prevails in England and Ireland, the United States, except Louisiana and Porto Rico, Canada, except Quebec, India, except Ceylon and except over Hindus and Mohammedans as to inheritance and family law, and the principal British dominions and colonies except South Africa.

It is assumed that the student has a dogmatic knowledge of Anglo-American law.

The following will be of use to the student of jurisprudence:

Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England (4 vols. Lewis's ed. 1897).

First ed. 1765-1769.

See Pollock, The Lawyer as a Citizen of the World 48 L. Q. Rev. 40

The student of jurisprudence may also refer profitably to the restatement of the law now in progress under the auspices of the American Law Institute.

Account must be taken also of two other systems:

C. The Canon Law — the law of the church during the Middle Ages. Corpus Juris Canonici (ed. by Friedberg, 3 vols. 1876–1882).

See also Codex iuris canonici (1918); Sohm, Kirchenrecht (1892); Hinschius, Kirchenrecht (6 vols. 1896–1897); De Angelis, Praelectiones iuris canonici (4 vols. 1877–1884); Haring, Grundzüge des katholischen Kirchenrechts (2 ed. 1916); Gonzales Tellez, Commentaria perpetua in singulos textus quinque librorum Decretalium Gregorii IX (4 vols. 1673, there are also ed. 1690, 1699, 1713).

On the sources of the canon law see Schulte, Geschichte der Quellen und Literatur des canonischen Rechts (3 vols. 1875–1880); Tardif, Histoire des sources du droit canonique (1887); Cicognani, Canon Law (transl. by O'Hara and Brennan 1934) 60–403.

D. International Law — a system of adjusting the relations of states with one another so as to meet the approval of the moral sentiment of the community of nations; in great part an application of the principles of private law to the relations of states.

XIII. MATERIALS FOR HISTORICAL JURISPRUDENCE

The materials for historical jurisprudence are drawn from:

A. The history of the developed systems of law, Roman and Germanic;
B. The systems of law which obtained among peoples of some degree of civilization which did not attain to maturity because of the spread of the Roman law, or of the English law; C. The Hindu and the Mahomedan law, which have a limited application today in British India; D. "Adatrecht" (the native customary law of the Dutch East Indies); E. Customary law of Nepal; and F. The institutions of social control among primitive and uncivilized peoples.
